Jury Drops Case, Hauptmann Due to Die Tonight

Gov. Hoffman Now Believed Single Hope For German

Ventremen End Wendel Angle; Could Reopen Kidnaping Inquiry.

Will Not Convene Again Till Tuesday

2 Handwriting Experts Are Reconvicted of Carpenter's Guilt.

By Edward T. Folliard.

A Staff Correspondent.

Trenton, N. J. (Friday), April 3.—The "runaway" grand jury of Mercer County late last night removed itself as an obstacle in Bruno Richard Hauptmann's path to the electric chair.

The jury, it was announced at 12:10 a. m. today, had voted to throw out the case of Paul H. Wendel, disbarred Trenton attorney, whose repudiated "confession" was used Tuesday night to delay Hauptmann's execution.

Hauptmann now is scheduled to die at 8 o'clock tonight.

The only man who can save him for the time being, it appeared, is Gov. Harold G. Hoffman, who has consistently stated that the German did not get a fair trial at Flemington.

It was freely predicted in Trenton all day yesterday that Gov. Hoffman would grant Hauptmann another 30-day reprieve, and so too, it was reported that the grand jury would indict Wendel.

The 23 grand jurors filed out of the third floor room in the Trenton courthouse at 11:43 o'clock last night.

A half hour or so later County Prosecutor Marshall told reporters:

"The only thing I can tell you is that the grand jury has discontinued the Hauptmann investigation and will not meet again until Tuesday at 1:30 p. m."

Wendel Case Dropped.

Prosecutor Marshall later explained that he meant the grand jury had discontinued the Wendel case.

He added that the jury could, of course, inquire into other phases of the Lindbergh kidnaping.

The feeling was general, however, that the much-denounced grand jury had washed its hands of the kidnaping.

Hauptmann, almost forgotten while the jury wrangled over the Wendel case, now comes back in the spotlight, as he faces another "last day."

Wendel himself appeared before the grand jury last night for 3 1/2 hours. He told how he was "shanghaied" on a New York street last February, how he was burned with lighted cigarettes and otherwise tortured until he confessed to the kidnaping.

He was held in Brooklyn for ten days, he said, and then taken to Ellis Parker, referred to here as "Hoffman's sleuth," who last Saturday turned him over to Trenton police. Two handwriting experts also appeared before the grand jury last night and testified that Wendel's handwriting bore no resemblance to the handwriting in the Lindbergh ransom notes.

They were Elbridge W. Stein and Albert D. Osborn, both of whom were prosecution witnesses at Flemington.

Osborn told the jury that the "farewell letter" which Hauptmann wrote to Gov. Hoffman Tuesday afternoon had strengthened his conviction that the German wrote the ransom notes.

Earlier yesterday Gov. Hoffman, champion of Hauptmann, and Attorney General David T. Wilentz, who prosecuted him, appeared before the grand jury.

No Basis for Indictment.

Wilentz said even if Wendel's "confession" were accepted as true, that was no basis for indicting him for murder.

"The confession," Wilentz declared, "says the child died a natural death; that the child fell out of bed in Wendel's absence after it was there a month. That doesn't spell murder in this country."

In the confession, which he said was "beaten out" of him, Wendel told how he had returned to his home here to find the lifeless body of the Lindbergh baby on the floor beside a bed.

Gov. Hoffman, political foe of Wilentz, was informed of Wilentz's

Borah Loses New York Vote In G.O.P. Presidential Primary

One Upstate District Smothers Idahoan, 10 to 1; Early Gotham Returns Are 3 to 1 Against Senator to Run on Party Ticket.

By the Associated Press.

Albany, N. Y. (Friday), April 3.—Regular Republican candidates for seats at the national convention took a 5-to-1 lead in Up-State New York contests early today over candidates claimed by Senator Borah.

The calculation is based on early and scattered returns.

First returns from New York City came from the Fifteenth Congressional District, where the regular organization gained a 3-to-1 advantage over the Borah organization leaders, Representative Hamilton Fish, Jr., and William Ziegler, Jr., former treasurer of the Republican State Committee.

In the First Congressional District, on the eastern half of Long Island, the regular organization, uncommitted to any Presidential candidate, smothered Borah delegates 10 to 1 in the first returns.

Buried 10 to 1 Upstate.

In the Thirty-seventh District, Warren W. W. Clute, sr., and W. A. Underhill, uncommitted candidates, were running 2 to 1 ahead of Thomas E. Slater and Harry R. Sanford, claimed by Borah. In 37 out of 261 districts, Clute and Underhill had 1,022 and 1,108 votes respectively, and Slater and Sanford, 574 and 584.

Representative John Taber and William J. Maier, former chairman of the Republican State committee, gave the organization an early 10-to-1 lead in the Thirty-sixth Congressional District. Their opponents are former Assemblyman Harry A. Teller and James D. Quill.

Taber and Maier polled 729 and 732 votes, respectively, in 10 out of 218 districts as compared to 55 and 56 for Teller and Quill.

Copeland told Mrs. Lester Buchanan, a volunteer social worker, after she had described the plight of Callinger patients and revealed to the committee some of the things she has done to make them more comfortable.

That the Appropriations subcommittee, headed by Senator Elmer Thomas, of Oklahoma, will ignore the health items eliminated from the 1937 District supply bill by the House was virtually assured when the hearing came to a close.

Chairman Thomas expressed the opinion such action should be taken, making clear that he was speaking only for himself, and not for his subcommittee.

Pupils Continue Strike, Defying Truancy Act

Philadelphia, April 2 (AP).—Disregarding threats of arrests under the truancy act, Shepley High School students remained on strike today, demanding the retention of George Wellener as physical education instructor.

Pickets of boys and girls and a few women again barred roads to the school and stopped buses carrying children from outlying districts. Some Brandonville mothers had announced they would take their children through the lines, but they did not appear.

Gift Never Paid Into Age Fund, House Is Told

Clements Tells of Cure-All Advertisements in Townsend Paper.

By Felix Bruner.

In a hearing that was both amazing and amusing, a House committee yesterday heard that $1,700 collected at a Los Angeles Town meeting never reached the treasury of the organization; that up to July 1, 1935, the books of Old Age Revolving Pension, Ltd., were neither complete nor accurate, and that Dr. F. E. Townsend regularly eats handfuls of large stomach pills which enable him to talk often and long.

The story of the Los Angeles meeting was told by Robert E. Clements, former secretary of the organization, who resigned after a controversy with Townsend. It was indicated that a dispute over the disposition of the $1,700 was involved in the differences between the co-founders of the movement. Testimony concerning the books of the national organization was given by John Bloodsworth, in charge of a group of accountants employed by the committee.

The story of the stomach pills was contained in a letter from Clements to M. D. Cerf, advertising manager of the Townsend Weekly, which carries many columns of advertisements of "cures" and rejuvenation claims, mostly appealing to the aged.

Following the day's testimony, the hearing was recessed for possibly

We Saw Stars And That, Says Science, Explains Things.

By the Associated Press.

Princeton, N. J., April 2.—A collision between earth and some "small extra-terrestrial body," perhaps a star like the asteroid that passed so closely two months ago, explains the mysterious river valleys, cut thousands of feet deep in granite, far below the sea.

The collision explanation was made tonight in Science, official organ of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, by H. H. Hess and Paul MacClintock, Princeton geologists. They admit it is "radical and highly speculative."

But 40 of these sunken valleys along continental margins have recently been mapped by new echosounding devices. Their nature indicates they were cut by erosion when they lay above sea level.

Some vast ice age that temporarily lowered sea level has been advanced as an explanation. But the Princetonians point out that ice can scarcely account for sufficient lowering of the oceans.

Tax Program Called Threat To Entire Capitalist System

Business Leaders Denounce Danger to Industry at Hearing; Communist Praises Levies as 'Right Step.'

By Robert C. Albright.

Denounced as a "direct attack upon the capitalistic system" and a "share the wealth" proposal that will penalize group thrift and cause many bankruptcies, the Administration's $799,000,000 tax program last night encountered a storm of opposition from small and large business.

Hardly had organized business joined its attack, before the Communist Party sponsored the first witness to heartily endorse tax objectives of the committee's report. He complained only that it did not go far enough.

Max Bedacht, witness for the Communists, said his party "has always advocated taxation of undistributed surpluses."

"It is at least a step in the right direction," he said, "toward shifting the tax burden from the shoulders of the poor to the shoulders of the rich." Bedacht said.

Republicans chuckled merrily as Democrats, nonplussed by Bedacht's testimony, sought to persuade him that he was actually testifying against the bill.

"But I'm not against it," Bedacht insisted. "The Communist Party is in favor of taxing undistributed corporate surpluses. But you have left large loopholes that must be plugged to prevent the rich from avoiding these taxes."

Ironically, the Communist statement came on the heels of testimony by Franklin W. Fort, one

One Dies, Pal Hurt In 250-Foot Plunge

Gorham, N. H., April 2 (AP).—One Princeton junior hurtled to his death and another to serious injury in a desperate fall from the precipitous, ice-covered, rocky slope of Mount Washington last night.

Details of the accident to the two youths, who became known tonight when rescuers brought to the base of the mountain the body of John Winthrop Fowler, 19, of New York City.

Fowler's companion, McKim Danglefield, also of New York City, stumbled into the Appalachian Club in Pinkham Notch at 7 p. m. yesterday with word he had become separated from his classmate while trying to scale the Head Wall. He was suffering from cuts.

Win Lees, observer at the weather station atop the mountain, and several companions found Fowler, still alive, about a half-mile from the mountain top, at the foot of a steep 250-foot slope. Fowler, son of Dr. Robert H. Fowler, of New York City, died, however, before he could be brought to shelter.

Asked yesterday what she thought of the satiric movement, she said: "I think it's just as funny as it can be. And—taken lightly, as it should be—a grand pricking of lots of bubbles."

Mrs. Roosevelt, however, cautioned that the organization, if carried to extremes, might hurt some feelings.

She described as ill-advised the choice of the term "Gold Star Mothers" as the title of the veterans' auxiliary. She considered organization of an auxiliary in itself very amusing.

MENACE OF FLOODS INCREASES DISASTER CAUSED BY CYCLONE

Cordele, Ga., Reports 16 Dead, Many Hurt; 3-Block Swath Cut Through City; Atlanta Also Suffers.

Tornadoic winds, lashing five Southern States yesterday and last night, left at least 35 dead, more than 500 injured, thousands homeless and property damage estimated in the millions.

The death toll was mounting hourly. Florida, Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia felt the force of the gale.

National Guardsmen were called out to handle the situation at Greensboro, N. C., where at least seven were killed and more than 200 injured as fires swept sections of the city in the wake of a devastating storm.

At Cordele, Ga., 16 were known dead as the storm cut a path about three blocks wide and 70 miles long through the region. Eight city blocks of residences were wrecked. Five companies of National Guardsmen patrolled the area and directed rescue work.

The deaths brought to more than 50 the season's storm toll. Seventeen were killed in tornadoes in the same region some weeks ago.

The winds roared out of the southwest corner of Georgia, hedge-hopped crazily to the northeast, turned north after striking at Cordele and moved into the Carolinas after an abrupt shift to the east.

Picking up speed, the twister started its erratic course across the fertile tobacco country. The business section at Vidalia, 70 miles from Cordele, was badly damaged and several persons were injured.

Cutting northward, the disturbance moved up-State, leaving three dead and two missing at Tignall, a community in central Georgia.

A mile-wide swath was cut near Glennville.

Continuing into the Carolinas, the heavy wind and rain storms took a heavy toll of lives, caused a train wreck and widespread property loss.

A Southern Railway passenger train, wrecked near Asheville, was derailed by an earthslide near Paint Rock, injuring the engineer and fireman as the locomotive plunged into French Broad River.

More than 1,000 houses at Concord, N. C., were destroyed and a number of mills in that textile center were destroyed. Hampton, S. C., was raked by the destructive winds.

West central Alabama was raked by tornadoic winds. Striking early yesterday the gale leveled many rural homes near Gordo, Ala.

Added to the devastation of the storm was the flood menace along streams creeping from their banks following rains of near-cloudburst proportions.

Four of the identified dead lived in one block in South Greensboro, where heaviest damage was done. Fires followed the gale.

The identified dead were: Mr. and Mrs. John Murphy, middle-aged couple; Mrs. Raymond Johnson, 46, a next-door neighbor to the Murphys; Mrs. W. C. Brain, 58; an unidentified white man about 23 years old, who was killed when he came in contact with an electric power line.

Three Negroes identified are William Ward, 21; J. W. Powell, 50; Mrs. Oscar Trotter, 41.

Shortly before midnight a report at the office of Sheriff Joe U. Phipps of Guilford County, said that 17

Gifford Insists A.T. & T. Policy For the Public

Private Industry Similar to Government, He Tells Becker.

Continuing his vigorous fact-finding drive to show that the only safeguards the public has against any acts of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. lie in the "integrity and wisdom" of the management, Samuel Becker, special FCC counsel, engaged yesterday in a duel of wit with Walter S. Gifford, president of the $5,000,000,000 business.

Said Gifford: "Don't we all have to rely on the integrity and wisdom of others? Isn't Government run on that basis?"

"There is a distinction between a private company and the Government," said Becker.

"Yes, you have a regulated industry," shot back Gifford. "But the public can vote its officers out, and they can't with you," retorted the aggressive FCC investigator.

"I think they can, and I think they would," answered Gifford.

The two had been struggling with the question of the "public interest." Gifford has repeatedly testified, and did again yesterday that "in the long run, the public interest and the private interest of a business such as the A. T. & T. coincide." Becker pushed hard on this point, stressing the possible disparity between an immediate private interest of the vast company and the public interest. Gifford continued to insist the two were identical "in the long run."

Quotes Old Testimony.
Becker then quoted to Gifford a passage from a discussion made by the A. T. & T. president before the personnel publicity conference of the company on October 7, 1930, when Gifford said:

"If anyone tries to tell me he is acting in a business capacity in the public interest, I am inclined to say 'Oh, bunk' in my own mind, unless the public interest and his interest coincide."

He asked the urbane, gray-haired telephone chief to explain his passage. Gifford stated that after testifying before the Couzens committee that year he had been told by several members of the committee that when he had talked "what the Japanese textile exporters do not understand the meaning of the term 'moderate levels'."

Nevertheless, there is more involved in this situation than the textile industry finding itself confronted with sharp competition from Asia. One may be sympathetic with the textile industry yet contend that the importance of stimulating world-wide trade is too great for erection of any new barriers against imports at this time. "If Japanese are dumping, present laws are sufficient to take care of the situation," said Becker.

Still, another important consideration, frequently lost sight of in these controversies over alleged menace of Japanese trade, is that the Japanese have been this country's third best customer—spending more money here than we do with them. Last year Japanese bought here $203,000,000 of goods, compared with American purchases from them of $133,000,000—leaving a balance in our favor of $60,000,000.

This Japanese trade is of great importance to the Southland. Japan has become this country's best customer for cotton. Now it is clear that unless the Japanese are able to build up foreign exchange here—chiefly by selling their goods—they will be unable to buy this cotton and will turn to other producers, further complicating a difficult American agricultural problem.

Such are the ramifications of foreign trade, which some folks think no longer counts. But any substantial shrinkage in cotton exports to Japan will be felt severely in the South. Incidentally, none of the Japanese problem in any way has grown out of a Hull reciprocal trade agreement.

The latest proposal on Capitol Hill in behalf of promoting foreign trade is more political than economic in its approach. This is the Mitchell-Lewis bill for creation of a five-man foreign trade board to co-ordinate and harmonize foreign commercial and financial policies.

The measure originally was proposed by George M. Peek, forced out of the Administration because of his frequent indirect assaults on the Hull program. It is now being pushed by Democrats who wish to pacify Peek and bring him back into the New Deal fold. They fear he will play havoc with President Roosevelt's prospects in some agrarian States.

Senator Lewis, who is sponsoring the Peek-inspired bill, particularly would like to see it adopted, as Peek's influence is especially strong with Illinois farmers and the Senator comes up for reelection this year. Certain State Department officials regard the foreign trade board proposal as unnecessary and in some ways quite objectionable.

Nevertheless, it is possible a compromise acceptable all around may be formulated and that George Peek may end up as chairman of the new board. In that event he would abandon plans he now has to do some stump speaking through the farm belt this year.

It looks like there will be as many aspirants at Cleveland for the Republican Vice Presidential nomination as for head of the ticket. It is almost certain that the Republicans will nominate a Middle Westerner for the Presidency. Therefore his running mate will come from "The Coast," but the question is, Which coast?

Containing that the East will be certainly Republican and that the party needs strengthening in the Far West, Pacific Coast Republicans argue the Vice Presidential nominee should come from their section. They suggest Senator Frederick Steiwer, of Oregon, and Dr. Robert Gordon Sproul, president of the University of California.

New York Republicans are expected to make either James W. Wadsworth or Bertrand Snell their favorite son to enhance the chances of one of them for the Vice Presidency. Pennsylvania Republicans are talking about projecting Judge George Wendell Maxey for the honor—while Maryland Republicans think Gov. Nice has the best chance.

Inspector Bernard W. Thompson said yesterday the Department of Justice would handle the case outside the city. He stated no charges have been placed against the husband of Mrs. Huff and his two brothers.

Three brothers have already been arrested. They were seized Wednesday when a 20-year-old waitress, Hope Huff, came to Police Headquarters and told police she had married one of the men and he placed her in a disorderly house in New York.

Japan's Cotton Goods Exports to U. S. Alarming; Textile Men Bombard Congress.

By Franklin Waltman

AGITATION again has commenced for doing something about imports of cotton piece goods from Japan.

due to the unusually large shipments received here during January despite the "gentlemen's agreement" of last December under which the Nipponese agreed to hold their exports here to "moderate levels."

That agreement, it will be recalled, resulted from agitation in the spring of last year somewhat similar to that which is now making its appearance. Japanese textile imports substantially jumped in early 1935, sending New England manufacturers, as well as Southern mill owners to Washington, beseeching that embargoes be decreed or tariffs be raised. The Roosevelt Administration resisted this pressure and finally persuaded the Japanese to be considerate of domestic sentiment here.

Commerce Department figures show, however, that in January the Japanese sent 6,900,000 square yards of cotton piece goods to this country—double the volume of January, 1935, and 2,000,000 square yards greater than in February last year. It is computed that January imports annually were at a rate of 80,000,000 square yards, compared with 36,000,000 square yards last year, and less than 8,000,000 square yards in 1934.

The January imports represent a rather startling increase in Japanese competition and it is little wonder that the Cotton Textile Institute, particularly its members in the handkerchief and underwear trade, sprang to action and since have started a bombardment of members of Congress, demanding some action. It is clear that Japanese textile exporters do not understand the meaning of the term "moderate levels."

Nevertheless, there is more involved in this situation than the textile industry finding itself confronted with sharp competition from Asia. One may be sympathetic with the textile industry yet contend that the importance of stimulating world-wide trade is too great for erection of any new barriers against imports at this time. Inspector Bernard W. Thompson said yesterday the Department of Justice would handle the case outside the city. He stated no charges have been placed against the husband of Mrs. Huff and his two brothers.

Three brothers have already been arrested. They were seized Wednesday when a 20-year-old waitress, Hope Huff, came to Police Headquarters and told police she had married one of the men and he placed her in a disorderly house in New York.

'Wise-Cracking' Laid to Wallace By Republicans

'Unbecoming,' Fletcher Says of Reply to Request on AAA Fund Publicity.

By the Associated Press.

Henry P. Fletcher, chairman of the Republican National Committee, yesterday accused Secretary Wallace of attempting to "wise-crack away" the demand of Senator Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, for a list of AAA beneficiaries who received more than $10,000 last year.

"Where more than $10,000,000 in taxpayers' money is concerned," he said, "it is unbecoming to the Secretary of Agriculture to behave and talk as though he were playing a low-comedy role in vaudeville."

He referred to comment from Wallace yesterday which several reporters understood to say that the publication of such a list would invite kidnapping activities against the "farmer's daughter." Today an official statement asserted he said "farmers' dollars."

Fletcher, however, stuck by the original news stories on the statement. "His talk of fearing to disclose the payments to farmers in amount of $10,000 or more because a national wave of kidnapping would result is ridiculous, not funny," Fletcher said.

At the same time the Republican leader disputed a statement by Chester Davis, administrator of AAA, that it would take the entire Comptroller's division working night and day for six weeks to produce such a list.

In a letter dated March 26, 1936, written to Representative John Taber, Fletcher said, "The Comptroller advised that the list of beneficiaries requested by Senator Vandenberg could be compiled from the punch cards retained by the Division of Disbursements, Treasury Department, which were used to prepare the payment checks."

"The ten operators and machines could do the job in a week if three shifts were maintained, and the Comptroller says that the three-shift plan is often used in the department."

"What then is behind Mr. Wallace's hedging? Whom is he hiding? Why must a veil of secrecy hang over these punch cards?"

He said he had been publicly charged in the Senate that benefit payments had included $168,000 to one cotton grower, $219,825 to one hog raiser, and $705,488 and $961,084 to one bank controlling sugar property in Puerto Rico and "another sugar company operating on the same island."

"Mr. Wallace," he never denied the charges, and since that is the case one wonders how many comparable cases might be found in the records?"

Mr. Wallace is paying out amounts that would provoke kidnapping, let him make public those amounts. His fears of an abduction wave indicate the individual checks to some farmers must be large.

Lindbergh Aid Charges Attack; Guard Assigned

Gov. Hoffman Says Investigators Visited Estate; They Deny Assault.

By the Associated Press.
Trenton, N. J., April 2.—State troopers were assigned again today to the Lindbergh estate at Hopewell after a clash between Gov. Hoffman and Prosecutor Anthony M. Hauck Jr. of Hunterdon County, over charges by the caretaker that he had been assaulted by the Governor's investigators.

The report of the caretaker, Joseph Lyons, to Hauck said five men, representing themselves as investigators for the Governor in the Lindbergh kidnap-murder case, appeared at the estate and demanded admission. He refused and in the ensuing altercation, he charged, the men handled him roughly and drove him to jump hastily aside.

It was at the Hopewell home the Lindbergh baby was kidnapped March 1, 1932.

Auto Is Traced.
Hauck, seeking identification of the automobile, was referred by the motor vehicle department to Gov. Hoffman, who closed later it was owned by a State trade board for cleaning and dyeing, headed by Frank Holmes, close political and personal friend of the chief executive. Holmes denied there was any assault.

For many months after the kidnapping of the Lindbergh child and after public interest subsided, State troopers maintained a guard at the estate. It was finally withdrawn, but after Lyons' report to Hauck yesterday, two troopers resumed a watch.

Hauck, refused information at the motor vehicle department which Gov. Hoffman once headed, disclosed the incident to the newspapers and asserted there was "no doubt assault and battery had been committed."

The Governor retorted Hauck "shouldn't work himself into such a fury" and said that when information was requested in the proper manner "every degree of courtesy and consideration will be given him, which is more than can be said of some of the officials connected with the prosecution of (Bruno) Hauptmann."

Detectives in Party.
Holmes, in the presence of the Governor, told Hauck he and four other men were in the car. These, he said, were Leo Meade, head of the National Bureau of Investigation, a private detective agency; Meade's son, William Lewis, William Saunders, investigator for C. Lloyd Fisher, chief counsel for Hauptmann, and another man, unknown to him.

The Governor said the men had gone to the estate to make measurements, the nature of which, he did not disclose.

"Mr. Meade," said the Governor, "advised the caretaker that he represented me and requested permission to inspect the property. This permission was denied and the caretaker, I am advised, tried to prevent the party from leaving the scene."

The estate was relinquished by Charles A. Lindbergh soon after the finding of his dead baby's body and turned over to a foundation for the establishment of a child welfare institution. It was never occupied for that purpose and remains deserted except for the caretaker.

pledged party candidates. His supporters pointed out that the result in one-fifth of the State would not be a clear indication of his strength in the State as a whole. Political observers, however, looked on the returns as pointing which way the political straws were leaning.

The Borah movement is led by W. Kingsland Macy, former G. O. State chairman; Representative Fish and Ziegler.

The regular Republican candidates, popularly known as the "Old Guard" group, were dominated by National Committeeman Charles D. Hillis, who wants to send an uninvited delegation to the national convention in Cleveland.

Representative Fish, who, along with Mack, took up the cudgel for the Idaho Senator several months ago, amassed only 172 votes against the 412 for the regular Republican candidates, James R. Sheffield, in the Fifteenth Congressional District in New York City. The returns were from one-third of the 72 election districts there.

Maine "Disposed" to Knox.
Bangor, Me., April 2.—The Maine Republican convention tonight ratified a slate of 13 delegates unprompted, but "disposed" party leaders said, to support Col. Frank Knox, for the Presidential nomination "as long as he has a chance."

State Chairman A. Eugene Sewall said that, with one possible exception, the delegation now was favorable to the candidacy of the Chicago and Manchester, N. H., publisher and he believed the entire group would be in accord at the Cleveland convention.

The convention, largest in Maine's history, adopted a platform which included planks advocating freedom of the press and radio, a sound currency based on gold, old age pensions "commensurate with need," and a balanced national budget.

One plank opposed "executive encroachment upon legislative functions."

The list of national delegates submitted by party leaders ran about of opposition on a voice vote but, after a poll of county delegations was taken, the entire list was ratified 385 to 312.

German Writes Mother of Plan To Seek Two Perjury Arrests

Letter Penned on March 19 Is Revealed; 'They Just Want to Sentence Someone,' He Says, Claiming to Be 'Goat.'

By the Associated Press.
Kamenz, Germany, April 2.—Bruno Richard Hauptmann asserted, in a letter received by his mother today, that his wife intended to demand the arrest of two witnesses who testified for the State at the trial at which he was convicted of the kidnap-murder of Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr.

"We have proof that two State witnesses committed perjury," the condemned man wrote on March 19 to the 71-year-old Frau Pauline Hauptmann. "We will demand their arrest."

He did not name the two, but said "one is half blind and the other was promised a reward."

In a long, closely written letter from the Trenton prison, where he narrowly escaped execution Tuesday, Hauptmann said:

"Human hypocrisy may go far, but I still have so much confidence in humanity that I believe it will shy from murdering an innocent man."

Inquiry Sought In American's Death in Brazil

Marcantonio Charges in House That Youth Was Tortured by Police.

By the Associated Press.
Representative Marcantonio (Republican), of New York, charging on the House floor that Victor A. Barron, a young American citizen, was tortured and murdered by police of Rio de Janeiro on March 5, yesterday demanded an investigation of "State Department negligence."

He said his statement was based on "irrefutable" testimony of Joseph R. Brodsky, attorney, 100 Fifth avenue, New York, and a Brazilian surgeon who performed an autopsy on the body of the dead Barron.

Barron, an employee of Louis Prestes, political opponent of the Vargas government in Brazil, was arrested on suspicion of complicity in the recent Brazilian insurrection. Reports to the State Department said he revealed Prestes' whereabouts to Rio de Janeiro police and, afterward, in a fit of remorse, committed suicide by hurling himself from a third-story jail window.

"At the time of the State Department report I questioned the suicide story," Marcantonio said, "and since then I have obtained evidence to disprove its veracity."

He read a statement by Brodsky, reputedly an eyewitness to the affair.

"Barron was tortured from the time of his arrest until they (the Rio de Janeiro police) killed him. They stabbed him and beat him with belts and rubber hoses; they burned and shocked him with live electric wires; they punched and kicked him around constantly and did not let him sleep for days. He was not allowed to sit down; he was given no water. Whenever he fell unconscious they revived him to start all over again."

"When Barron would not tell where to find Prestes they tried to get him drunk enough to talk. He refused liquor, and they broke his jaw and teeth in forcing raw alcohol through his lips and nostrils."

German Tells His Wife: I'll See You Again

Hauptmann and Mate Both Confident; Refrain From Farewells.

Trenton, N. J., April 2.—"I'll see you again," Bruno Richard Hauptmann cheerfully told his wife, Anna, when she left his death cell today on the eve of his scheduled execution.

"I'll see you again, Richard," Mrs. Hauptmann replied confidently, and walked through the steel prison doors smiling.

There were no farewells exchanged between the condemned Lindbergh baby-slayer and the wife who declared today he will not die.

"Do you feel confident this is not your last visit?" Mrs. Hauptmann was asked as she emerged from the prison after the last call she is permitted under prison rules, unless something intervenes to bring another delay.

"Yes, I do," she said firmly, and smiled again.

The white-clad prison nurse, Miss Sarah Killian, accompanied Mrs. Hauptmann to the death cell, stayed with her through a 45-minute chat with Hauptmann and took her to the prison door.

"The nurse is always present on last visits, to attend the visitor in case she faints," explained Col. Mark O. Kimberling, principal keeper of the New Jersey State Prison.

Mrs. Hauptmann has made three trips with the nurse to the death-house. On her third "last visit" she showed no sign of collapsing.

In contrast to her forlorn manner yesterday, when she took her husband to the news of his new death date—"8 p. m. Friday"—she seemed at times almost buoyant.

She informed her husband of the activity at the courthouse, where Gov. Harold G. Hoffman appeared before the grand jury investigating a charge that another man—Paul H. Wendel—murdered the Lindbergh baby.

"Hauptmann was in good spirits when his wife left," Col. Kimberling said, "although earlier he had been depressed."

"The conversation was cheerful and was on a number of subjects," he said. "As she left her hotel room to go to the prison, Mrs. Hauptmann said 'I feel encouraged.' She had been receiving reports of witnesses called before the grand jury in the Wendel case."

He soothed her by saying, "People seem to see clearer now, as the propaganda which was intended to incite has somewhat ceased. To be frank, it is this propaganda, false witnesses and indirect evidence, that resulted in the verdict."

Hauptmann wrote that if "they really intend to murder the father" of his boy, "I am not afraid of it."

The letter appeared to have brought the old lady a ray of hope. She avoided another night of tortured waiting in her own house, sleeping at the home of friends, after a hard day's work, during which she had little time to muse.

statement. He said sarcastically: "That's a new one. Why didn't they think of that two or three days ago?"

Jury Reads Statement.
Before summoning Wendel the grand jury read a 42-page statement submitted by him.

In a statement charged that he was "shanghaied" on a New York street, held in chains and tortured for ten days before being handed over to Ellis Parker, the "country detective" who had been investigating the case for Gov. Hoffman.

The name of Bruno Hauptmann, a by-word all over the world, today disappeared from the headlines here to make way for news from the grand jury room.

At the State prison, where he occupied cell 9 in the death house, Hauptmann talked with his wife in a room that he said afterward "seemed to brighten up."

That was the way Col. Mark O. Kimberling, principal keeper, put it after he returned from a visit to the death house.

Prisoner Confident.
"He went to bed last night at 10:30 and slept well," Col. Kimberling said. "He got up at 10 this morning and seemed to be feeling well and confident."

"His appetite, however, was still missing. He wanted only a cup of coffee and a roll for breakfast."

For a while after breakfast he seemed depressed, downcast. Then, about 1 o'clock, he cheered up and smoked his pipe.

"His wife's visit brightened him even more."

When Mrs. Hauptmann calls on her condemned husband, she is compelled to speak in English. Thus, the conversation between them is not so easy as it would be were they allowed to talk in German.

The principal topic is "Bubli," as they call their tiny son, Manfred. Always before she goes to the prison, Mrs. Hauptmann calls New York by telephone and talks to the baby, hoping he will say something which she may pass on to her husband.

Usually the Hauptmanns wind up a conversation by reassuring each other that "everything will come out all right."

Today's visit of Mrs. Hauptmann was another of those "last" visits. Tomorrow is supposed to be Hauptmann's execution day, and visitors are not allowed there.

"Is that her last visit?" Col. Kimberling was asked as Mrs. Hauptmann went out the door.

"Yes," he said, and then quickly added: "Unless something happens."

Like everybody else in this feverish town, Kimberling knows the Hauptmann case has now become utterly unpredictable.

Col. Kimberling has been ordered by Supreme Court Justice Thomas W. Trenchard, the 74-year-old jurist

Loney Says His Data Prove Wood Was Planted in Attic

Information on Wendel Is Sent to Wilentz by Alcohol Tax Unit.

By the Associated Press.
Arch Loney, PWA material expert, said yesterday he had sent Gov. Hoffman of New Jersey information which should convince him that evidence was planted in the attic of Bruno Richard Hauptmann's home.

"Of course," he explained, "a thorough technical report should be made of what I discovered in the attic, but I believe I've given him enough to justify new developments."

Loney visited the attic Wednesday last week with Hoffman and other officials.

Coincidentally with his statement, the Treasury announced that the alcohol tax-unit office at Philadelphia had given information to Attorney General Wilentz of New Jersey concerning Paul Wendel, who made and later repudiated a confession to the Lindbergh baby kidnapping.

"The alcohol tax-unit office at Philadelphia," said a Treasury spokesman, "found in its files certain information bearing upon the activities of Wendel, Mr. (Edward C.) Dougherty, the district supervisor, has laid the information before Mr. Wilentz, the attorney general, and will hold him in the line of appearance before the grand jury investigating Wendel's activities if he should be called."

After conferring with Capt. George Maines, described as a personal representative of Hoffman's, Loney repeated his contentions that the prosecution was mistaken in assuming that "rail" in the attic was evidence of a board in Hauptmann's attic.

He said efforts are being made to locate a New York lumber company employee who sold a board similar to the one found in the attic a week after Hauptmann's arrest.

He still said there was a record of the sale, Loney added, "and that it can be found."

Officials of the company he named—the National Millwork Lumber Corporation—denied having a record of any such sale.

Search for the man he contends sold the board is being conducted by the biggest dealer in flooring materials in the country," said Loney, who described him as "a friend."

The PWA employee said he would to do a really thorough job of investigation.

"The only thing that should not be considered is the evidence against the real kidnap-murderer. To keep the opera bouffe going, the hot money, the ladder and the ransom notes simply must be ignored."

Gov. Hoffman has solemnly announced at least three times that "no further reprieve will be granted." Last night he hedged. Asked whether the statement still stood, he answered:

"No comment."

Gamblers here report that there is heavy betting on the outcome of the Hauptmann case. As early as 1 p. m. last Tuesday, the evening of which was supposed to be Hauptmann's last, odds of 2 to 1 were being laid that the German would be alive on the morrow.

You can get the same odds now that he won't die tomorrow night.

Boys and Girls Called to Learn Ideals of Nazis

By the Associated Press.
Berlin, April 2.—Adolf Hitler took the first step tonight in a vast scheme to recruit all youth between 10 and 18 in organizations where they will be taught Nazi ideals.

He called the first two classes of boys and girls, aged from 10 to 11, to the swastika banner. Recruiting will continue until April 20 on a voluntary basis.

Youth leaders will scour the country until then in efforts to persuade children born in 1925 and 1926 to join the "young folk" or "Hitler girls" organizations.

The recruiting notice emphasizes that the parent need not fear to permit children to enter the Nazi organization, for rights of the home will be respected.

The duties of these small children, says the notice, will not tax their strength. The training is designed to strengthen them "physically as well as morally."

The results of this first voluntary recruiting likely will determine whether service in new organizations is to be made compulsory, as it is in the labor services and the army.

Recruiting of children 12 and 13 years old is expected to follow soon.

Officials, commenting on Hitler's Loarho counter-proposal, said they expected other nations defeated in the World War to follow Germany's lead in the movement to destroy the whole post-war system.

They pointed to the institution of military training in Austria as an example of the spreading of Hitler's diplomacy.

Grace and Irvin Find Prospects For Steel Good

Testify Before Senate Body on Bill to Alter Method of Price Fixing.

By the Associated Press.
Immediate prospects of the steel industry were pictured as "favorable" and "encouraging" today by W. A. Irvin, president of the United States Steel Corporation, and Eugene G. Grace, president of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation. Both appeared before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee to testify on a bill to alter price determination methods.

Irvin told reporters: "The outlook is favorable. We ought to keep going for the next couple of months at least as well as we are now."

His views were solicited after Grace, in response to a question from Chairman Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, testified: "Just at the moment the outlook is encouraging. Business in this quarter ought to be the highest in some time."

Asked about general conditions, Grace said "there is certainly a greater volume of business than there was."

Grace told the committee that Bethlehem Steel "may be" selling some of its products on a price determination formula from which the United States Steel Corporation was compelled to desist by the Federal Trade Commission.

Chairman Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, referred to the 1924 order of the Federal Trade Commission forbidding United States Steel to use the "Pittsburgh-plus" pricing system.

Under this system the price of steel included the production cost plus transportation charges from Pittsburgh.

Issuance of the order, Wheeler brought out, resulted in the establishment of the multiple basing point system which the bill would eliminate.

"Would Increase Prices?" "Doing away with the basing point system would increase prices through a decrease in competition," Grace said.

Wheeler read a section of the order against United States Steel decreeing that basing points be only production points.

"Why didn't you continue to sell on a Pittsburgh-plus basis?" Wheeler asked.

"Because the Steel Corporation desisted,"

"Do you feel you are complying with the order of the Federal Trade Commission at the present time?"

"We think so."

"Do you make sheets at Sparrows Point, Md.?" Wheeler asked.

"Yes."

"Is that a basing point?"

"No, the production is not important enough."

Suggests Non-Compliance.
Wheeler then read a portion of the commission order and suggested that Bethlehem was not complying with the order, since it was producing at Sparrows Point, but that place was not a basing point.

"If that is the case, under that interpretation we may not be complying," Grace replied.

"Yes."

"Is it a basing point for those products?"

"No," Grace said.

"Then again you're not complying with the order," commented Wheeler.

Grace sat silent.

Alexandria Bar Hears Van Vleck

Conflicts in American laws were discussed by William C. Van Vleck, George Washington University Law School dean, last night before the Alexandria Bar Association in George Mason Hotel.

The organization voted to provide free legal assistance to destitute residents. The action was taken on motion of Andrew W. Clarke, legal aid committee chairman.

Irving Diener and J. Randall Caton were named on a committee to arrange an association meeting May 7 patterned after the annual Gridiron Club dinner in Washington.

Mashy Hope Creek Bill Sent to White House

A bill authorizing Army engineers to make a preliminary examination of the Mashy Hope Creek, a tributary of the Nanticoke River, at Federalburg, Md., was signed yesterday by Vice President Garner and Speaker Byrns and sent to the President, according to the Associated Press.

The measure was introduced by Representative T. Alan Goldsborough (Democrat), Maryland. The Federalburg area suffered great flood damage last fall. Goldsborough wants the survey made to determine what projects might be carried out for flood control.

Tax Plan Held Menace

time chairman of the Home Loan Bank Board, and a former Republican Representative, who called the program "a far more violent attack on private property than this committee realizes."

The House Ways and Means Committee was forced into a night session on the measure as a steady parade of business spokesmen opened the first threatening attack on the pending tax proposals.

Fort, now president of the Lincoln National Bank, of Newark, N. J., said the Administration's tax program as "essentially contrary to the capitalist system, and instead of a program to raise revenue, it should be entitled, 'A bill to delay the payment of debts.'" Called Monopolistic.

Throughout the morning and afternoon, representatives of the National Association of Manufacturers hammered the committee with arguments that the report, as now drawn, would promote monopoly by destroying competition, stunt the growth of small business organizations, and increase speculation, reorganizations and bankruptcies.

One spokesman for that organization, Royal Little, of Providence, R. I., president of the Franklin Rayon Corporation, accused the committee in so many words of having made up its mind on the tax.

"If you now have a definite opinion as to the tax, it would be very difficult for anyone to change those opinions," declared Little.

Little was speedily challenged by Democratic committee members, who said the committee is a cross-section of interests in more than a score of States.

"How can you justify your statement that the committee is biased?"

Says Catastrophe Possible.
Taking the witness stand late in the evening, Fort told the committee the proposed bill "may result in very serious catastrophe."

"As a banker, I would feel that I would have to go over the credit field of every person in my file," he said. "The statute proposed here would readjust downward the rating of every corporation in America which needs its earnings to pay debts."

Fort said the new taxes would deal particularly severely with the railroads, many of which, he said, are in serious financial straits, and are badly in need of money for improvements.

"If you say that railroads may not pay their debts out of earnings, every rating service will reduce the security rating of those companies," he said. "The time might come when the roads could not even sell their bonds on the market."

Fort said the Administration "is erecting a flaming temple of debt on a quicksand of spending" and the capitalist system cannot survive if that policy is continued.

Thrift Endangered.
"Economists may define capitalism in various ways," he said. "Actually, however, it is nothing but encouragement of thrift. This bill is aimed at a fundamentally different purpose—encouragement of an accumulation of debt."

Aroused by Fort's testimony, Representative Fred M. Vinson (Democrat), Kentucky, charged he was not being helpful to the committee, but was "merely trying to grab headlines." Representative John W. McCormack (Democrat), Massachusetts, joined in declaring "abuses do more to destroy the property system than anything else."

But Fort refused to be swayed from his line of argument. He told the committee "it is about time we encouraged the sort of thrift that builds up reserves."

"Our generation has made a mess of its Federal and State financing," he said.

"We who inherited a Nation comparatively free from debts are preparing to pass on to our children a mess of debt—a staggering load of debt for them to pay."

Little told the committee the highly personal story of his own business life. How he entered business with $2,000 saved out of his Army pay, and worked up to be president of a company that gives jobs to 500 persons. He warned the committee to think carefully before declaring him an enemy of society.

He said the new tax proposals, by their heavy levies on corporate earnings, would prevent any other small company from growing as his had.

"Wrongful Use of Power."
Schluter, one of the National Association of Manufacturers' witnesses, said the proposed "windfall" tax was "a wrongful use of the taxing powers," and "almost impossible of administration."

Officer Blames Storm Deaths On Late Train

Delay of 7 Hours Prevented Evacuation of Florida Camps, Aid Says.

All the veterans who lost their lives in the hurricane off the Florida keys last September could have been saved, had the special train ordered from Miami to evacuate them not arrived seven hours late, the House World War Veterans' Committee, investigating the tragedy, was told yesterday.

Ray W. Sheldon, former assistant camp director, told the committee he ordered the train at 1:45 p. m. on Labor Day, but it did not leave Miami until 5:33, and reached the camps on the keys at 8:20 in the height of the storm. The railroad cars were washed from the track almost before the train stopped.

Sheldon said, and he was saved only by clinging to the cab of the engine throughout the night.

"Had the train left Miami at 4:30, as we thought, and arrived on time, it would have reached Matanzas at 6:10 and I believe I could have gotten the men on the train," Sheldon said.

Sheldon was questioned closely by members of the committee on the manner in which the camp was operated. He testified that, since it was a holiday, the veterans were scattered and only 101 men answered the breakfast call on the fatal September 2. Asked where the other men were, the official said that some were on leave for the week.

Others were on the way between Miami and the camps, 91 were in jail at Miami and 11 others in Miami had stolen a truck and started for Washington to see the President.

Asked by Representative Edith Nourse Rogers (Republican), Massachusetts, why trucks were not used to take the veterans out, Sheldon replied:

"We did not have enough trucks for the job without making several trips. Besides, we would not have dared take those men into a community without having made preparations in advance to care for them."

Attack on Wire Seizure Linked To Arms Makers

Schwollenbach Lays Anger of Liberty League to du Pont Interests.

Senator Schwollenbach (Democrat), Washington, combined an attack upon the munitions industry with a defense of seizure of telegrams by the Senate Lobby Committee in a radio talk last night. The Senator is a member of the committee and has been acting as its spokesman in the telegram controversy.

Schwollenbach undertook in the radio speech to answer charges against the committee made by Joseph Shouse, president of the American Liberty League. Recalling that members of the du Pont family are large contributors to the league, the Senator said: "Why open the Liberty League thus concentrate upon the investigation of the Senate Lobby Committee? Because the du Pont interests know that in any attempt they make to secure the repeal of the neutrality laws, this committee or one similarly constituted will be the President's most effective weapon in exposing and uncovering lobbying activities of the munitions industry of the Nation."

Most of Schwollenbach's talk was a repetition of the defense he has made in several Senate speeches. He contended that telegrams were examined because of evidence that thousands had been forged and that the examination had followed legal lines.

"If you believe in honest government," the Senator concluded, "if you believe in government free from the despoiling influence of political corruption, if you believe that government should not be tainted by the false and insidious propaganda of special interest lobbyists, if you believe that there should be a curb upon the activities of interests that would use your Government for their special profit to satisfy their special greed, if you believe in a government in which the facts are disclosed and in which the secret contacts between your representatives in the legislative halls and the representatives of corporations are unveiled, then I ask you to support your committee."

Meanwhile, the House Rules Committee postponed action until today on the request of the Senate Lobby Committee for $10,000 to pay legal expenses in defending suits brought against it by William Randolph Hearst, publisher.

N. C. U. Athletes Must Register Aid Requests

Chapel Hill, N. C., April 1 (AP).—In conformity with student requirements to qualify for collegiate athletic teams at the University of North Carolina, this fall, notice was given here today that applications should be made to the respective faculty committees on loans, jobs and scholarships on the part of any students desiring to be considered for such awards.

It is required in the regulations that such notice be given April 1. The awards will be made not earlier than June 1.

'Economy' Pensioner Dead, Woman Used Checks as Aid.

By the Associated Press. Richmond, April 2.—Government money all comes from the same place, so it ought not to make any difference how it comes, Della Chisholm, 77-year-old Negro, told United States Commissioner Melvin Flegenheimer today, when arraigned on a charge of cashing pension checks of a dead boarder.

Her boarder, Edward Berry, received a $40-a-month pension which he split with her, Della explained. He died in 1929, but Della continued to cash the checks—88 of them, the Government charges.

"Della declared that if she had not cashed the pension checks she would have had to apply for Government aid," she added.

"The Government's giving away a lot of money anyway," she added. Commissioner Flegenheimer passed the case on to the United States district court grand jury for consideration.

Man Found Dead In Hotel Bed Here

A man, who had registered as D. Carey, of Norfolk, Va., was found dead in his bed at the Patterson Hotel, 1730 Pennsylvania avenue, late yesterday. Hotel officials, not having seen the man after he registered there Wednesday afternoon, became alarmed and notified the police.

An autopsy will be performed this morning. He was about 40 years old.

'Holy Land Exhibit Unique,' Church Secretary Writes Post

Showing of Biblical Scenes Scheduled to Close Sunday, But Effort Is Being Made to Keep It Open Due to Popular Demand.

"I found the Holy Land exhibit, which The Post is sponsoring for the benefit of Children's Hospital, the most unique thing of its kind I have ever had the pleasure of seeing."

So writes Miss Woodie Heatwole, secretary of the Memorial United Brethren Church, in one of the many enthusiastic letters The Post has received from those who have had an opportunity to view the famous Gauci Brothers' replica of Palestine as it was in the period during the life of Christ.

The exhibit depicts 124 Biblical scenes and against the reproductions of Holy Land towns and villages are grouped more than 2,000 miniature figures, 740 of which are animated to action. For instance, in one scene Jesus is shown raising Lazarus from the dead. As the arms of the Christ are lifted, the tomb of Lazarus slowly opens and Lazarus appears. In another scene, Jesus is shown teaching Peter to walk upon the water.

The figures of men, women children and domestic animals of the time are amazingly life-like and their natural motions never fail to bring gasps of astonishment and appreciation from the audience. One of the most popular moving figures in the exhibit among children is that of a lamb that miraculously turns its head, lifts a hind foot and scratches its ear.

The exhibit is scheduled to close Sunday, but so great has been the demand for its continuance from people who have not yet had an opportunity to see it that efforts are being made to continue it another week.

The Holy Land Exhibit is on view at Pythian Temple. Daily hours are from 11 a. m. to 5:30 p. m., and from 7 until 11 in the evening. On Sunday the exhibit opens at 1 p. m. Admissions are 25 cents for adults and 15 cents for children. Proceeds go to Children's Hospital.

State Fails to Ask Vera Stretz Death

New York, April 2 (AP).—The State tonight charged that Vera Stretz killed her former lover, Dr. Fritz Gebhardt, because he refused to divorce his wife and marry her, but closed its summation without pressing for the death penalty.

Assistant District Attorney Miles M. O'Brien described her as "a tigress, when provoked" as he closed the case against the 31-year-old stenographer, charged with first degree murder for the fatal shooting of the German industrialist in his Tower apartment last November 12.

Her own attorney, Samuel S. Leibowitz, pleaded she was justified in slaying Gebhardt to defend herself from an assault, and pleaded with the jury to acquit her and not to compromise its verdict with a lesser finding of guilt.

The case is expected to reach the jury tomorrow afternoon. Post-Ad-Writers will be glad to assist you in preparing a good, result-producing ad when you call National 4200.

Industrial Classes To Exhibit Work

The seventh annual industrial arts exhibit of the Armstrong High School will open tonight at 8 o'clock in the school auditorium with a special fashion show which will demonstrate costumes made by girl students. The school glee club, under direction of E. R. Amos, will render musical selections.

In other parts of the building students in vocational and technical courses will display their work and demonstrate operation of various machines. Classes in mechanical drawing will present an exposition of working, pictorial and architectural drawings correlated with masonry, carpentry and shop work. Molding, cabinet work and house construction also will be exhibited.

Battery work, house wiring, generator and motor testing will be demonstrated in applied electricity classes, while machine and electrical shops will show correlation with automobile mechanics, including repair work, ignition and automobile painting. Girls will demonstrate color and design, measurements, pattern cutting and making of all types of dresses. A housekeeping apartment will be open for inspection.

Selassie Seeks Peace, Report; Italians Push On

Emperor Reported Asking Settlement Outside the League.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, April 2.—Italian armies in Ethiopia pressed deeper into new territory today as Emperor Haile Selassie was reported to have made peace overtures to Fascist officials.

Informed sources asserted the Emperor completed first contacts for peace negotiations outside the League of Nations, their declarations based on reports from Marshal Pietro Badoglio, Italian commander in East Africa.

The first contacts, these sources declared, were communicated to Alessandro Lessona, undersecretary of state for colonies, who recently returned from a tour of inspection in Eritrea.

The second of the peace attempts—sponsored by the League of Nations under the supervision of Salvador de Madariaga, Spanish delegate—rested in a preliminary stage involving details of procedure.

(Dispatches from Geneva declared the Negus had asked the League to increase sanctions against the Italian government on the grounds the Fascist forces have "redoubled their barbarity.")

From the northern front, Marshal Badoglio telegraphed the military campaign "is being concluded with complete success," with his columns converging on Gondar, second city of Ethiopia, which already has been occupied.

Counter-attacks by the personal troops of the Emperor were reported to have been repulsed as the blackshirts moved toward the Lake Tana region, scene of British power interests. Officials repeated emphatically the guarantee previously given by Premier Mussolini that the British holdings would not be harmed.

(An Ethiopia official communique, however, denied the defeat of Selassie's bodyguard, claiming the trained warriors had captured four Italian forts.)

Tension increased in the Italian capital as students attempted to stage a demonstration before the British consulate.

Apple Growers to Raise $25,000 Drive Fund

Staunton, Va., April 2.—Levying an assessment of one-half cent a bushel on packaged apples, to raise an initial fund of $25,000, fruit growers in four States have organized "Appalachian Apples," an organization to advertise and promote apple sales in Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania.

On April 24 there will be a general meeting of growers in Martinsburg, W. Va., to further operations of the organization. Prior to that date, regional conferences will be held in Virginia, from Patrick to Frederick counties, similar rallies being held in the other States.

The executive committee is composed of William S. Campfield, Staunton, secretary-treasurer of the Virginia State Horticultural Society; Phil H. Gold, Winchester; H. W. Skinner and Fred Greiss, Flora Dale, Pa.; J. Andrew Cohl and Lloyd Balderston, Columbia, Md.; John F. Lewis and Malcolm R. Brown, Martinsburg, W. Va.; C. Purcell McCue, of Greenwood, Va., is temporary president.

Educators Will Meet.

Waynesboro, Pa., April 2.—The April meeting of the Franklin County Education Association will be held here Tuesday, April 14, with Terry Mitchell, director of advertising for a local industry, as the speaker. His subject will be "The Technique of Landscape Painting." Mrs. Elsie Lee Lam and Mrs. Gladys Lee, exchange teachers here from Honolulu, T. H., will give an educational demonstration.

Premier Koki Hirota and Gen. Kenkichi Ueda, Japanese Ambassador and commander in chief of Nippon's armies in Manchukuo, where hostilities were reported yesterday.

Japan Charges Soviet Distorts Border Clashes

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Tokyo (Friday), April 3.—Japanese resentment against Soviet Russia increased today because of alleged false Soviet reports regarding fighting between Soviet-Mongolian forces and Manchu-Japanese patrols in the no man's land between Manchukuo and Outer Mongolia.

Japanese charged Moscow with deliberate distortion of the facts for purposes of international propaganda.

A war office spokesman said informally that Moscow seemed to have started a program of deliberate prevarication.

Meantime, the Manchukuo foreign office in Hsinking indicated it will continue to insist that border incidents must be settled between Manchukuo and Outer Mongolia, ignoring Moscow's control of Outer Mongolia's foreign affairs. Hsinking sent a vigorous protest to Ulan Bator, capital of Outer Mongolia, against the recent border incident "for which Outer Mongolia solely is responsible."

That Japan was determined to meet Soviet defiance with equal determination was indicated when Hachiro Arita, veteran diplomat, was hurriedly installed as foreign minister in Premier Koki Hirota's cabinet.

Arita received the full approval of the army and was understood to be pledged to the "strong" foreign policy which the army always has demanded in northern Asia.

Deny Gas Reports.

Moscow, April 2 (P).—Officials of Outer Mongolia denied a report tonight said to have reached Tokyo that Mongolian planes dropped bombs filled with poison gas during frontier fighting early this week.

A Tass (Soviet) news agency dispatch from Ulan Bator said the opinion prevailing there is that Japanese spread the report to justify use of poison gas in further attacks being planned against Mongolians.

Paris to Reject Hitler Proposal In Reply Today

Will Charge His Peace Plan Dooes the League and Collective Security.

ize that her violation of Locarno, hard on the heels of so many conciliatory advances, has killed all confidence in her word," said an official.

Death of the League would result from adoption of the proposals, the official said, because it would "end, once and for all, collective security" by substituting bilateral pacts, "unevenly distributed throughout Europe."

Among the chief features of Hitler's program are: Negotiations for a "new Locarno" would be carried on for a period of four months.

Germany, France and Belgium would consent to have their frontiers controlled by an international commission composed of a representative of Great Britain, Italy and a neutral power.

Each of the three countries would guarantee not to increase its military forces along the border and would refrain from menacing aspersions on each other in publications and in teachings.

Immediately after the treaty is ratified Germany would rejoin the League of Nations.

The question of "colonial equality" and of "separating the League Covenant from its Versailles Treaty basis" would be clarified. A general conference would be held for the limitation of armaments.

A formal British guarantee of France's frontier against German aggression was received "with slight modifications" by the foreign office and the French were cheered.

Although the promise had been foreseen, it was feared that Germany might prevail upon Foreign Minister Anthony Eden to postpone sending it.

The French handed a similar letter to Great Britain tonight, promising reciprocal assistance if Britain is victim of aggression.

The cabinet will meet Monday with President Albert Lebrun to decide France's stand at a Locarno conference. The French will contend Hitler is "attempting to dictate to Europe in the same manner that he employs in his own country."

Premier Sarraut will attend a meeting tomorrow between Flandin and the French ambassadors to London, Berlin, Rome and Brussels.

The foreign minister was reported in official circles to have told the British Ambassador that France considers Hitler's proposals "almost entirely negative."

"The note tends toward destruction of the League and ruins efforts made since 1919 to organize peace," Flandin is said to have asserted, "because it would substitute a system of bilateral pacts for collective mutual assistance."

Hitler's demand that the League Covenant be detached from the Treaty of Versailles was greeted as "preposterous." An official said it would "shake the whole system of post-war European boundaries, making it easier for Germany to gobble up such nations as Lithuania and Czechoslovakia."

Informed sources said that although France will adopt a strong attitude against the German program she would employ tactics of delay while searching for a more favorable peace plan.

Easily Parley Opposed.

London April 2 (P).—Great Britain opposes an early meeting of the Locarno powers—urged by France—believing the situation is such that it should be discussed slowly through diplomatic channels, it was learned tonight.

Hopkins Denies WPA Politics; 2 Inquiries Set

Nation-Wide Investigations Into Relief Demanded by Borah, Davis.

Harry L. Hopkins, WPA administrator, doggedly denied charges of politics in the Works Progress Administration yesterday even as Senators William E. Borah (Republican, Idaho) and James J. Davis (Republican, Pennsylvania), separately demanded nation-wide investigations, and as two senatorial committees set themselves for inquiry next week into the part politics has played in relief.

"But I'd be a plain damn fool to appoint somebody to administer WPA who don't believe in it," said Hopkins, after asserting that 96 persons out of every 100 working on WPA projects in the country have been assigned to their jobs from relief rolls.

"I've yet personally to see the case—I don't say there isn't one—where a fellow got his job on relief rolls because of politics."

Hopkins, badgered by the steady drumfire of charges that politicians have capitalized on human misery through the WPA, was sharp in his denial that the 3,800,000 on WPA rolls got there through political affiliation.

The Senate Audit Committee, meanwhile, had indefinitely put aside the Davis resolution for an inquiry into WPA by the Senate Expenditures Committee. It was then that Senator Borah began his blast at the delay.

Urges Open Inquiry.

He said: "I don't see why anyone should be afraid of having such an investigation. It should be an open inquiry and go into all phases of the WPA. I have received letters from citizens complaining against the relief organization, at have other Senators."

However, Senator Joseph T. Robinson (Democrat), Arkansas, the majority leader, had said that in view of the authority just voted a special campaign funds investigating committee, yet unnamed, to study relief funds complaints, and the probability that the Appropriations Committee would explore the same field, no other inquiry was indicated.

Hopkins, at his press conference, said: "I've yet personally to see the case—I don't say there isn't one—where a fellow got his job on relief rolls because of politics."

"Some politicians take pride in telling the wide world they are the fellows who know how to get relief jobs. If that would stand up—if we were cutting off relief rolls only Democrats, or only Republicans—if they could make that stand up—they would have a case against us. But I don't think that's true."

"It depends on what you mean by politics. One reason I'm here is because I believe in Roosevelt's philosophy of government. So I believe in people administering WPA who believe in WPA."

Branded as Untrue.

Hopkins, shifting restlessly in his chair under the questions of reporters who asked him for an answer to charges made recently by a number of Senators and Representatives of politics in WPA, said the "crux of the problem" was in the "implication" that the administrative staff of the WPA was chosen by political influence on a patron-

225 Students Will See Selves On Screen in Washington Film

'It Happened in Washington' to Have Hollywood-Style Premiere at Palace Tomorrow Night; Sponsored by Post and Loew's Theaters.

Tomorrow night will be eventful for 225 local high school boys and girls. When they assemble at Loew's Palace Theater at 8 p. m. they will find out definitely whether they may continue to hope that some day they'll displace the Obies, Harlowes, Garbos and Joe Browns of screen fame.

These 225 Washington high school students are all in the cast of "It Happened in Washington," a high school story that was filmed here under the sponsorship of The Washington Post and the Loew Theaters. To make the evening memorable for these home-town screen stars, the Palace will hold a gala premiere. Present plans call for all principals, of which there are 15, to be driven to the theater in chauffeured automobiles. On arriving at the theater they will address "their public" through WOL microphones from the lobby.

They then will be escorted to reserved seats to view themselves on the screen for the first time, after age basis, and that this staff then chose the needy for jobs on a political basis. This, he said, was shown to be untrue from the fact that jobs were assigned to people on relief rolls in 96 per cent of all cases.

The charts prepared by the WPA statisticians showed that in December, 1935, 3 per cent of the total number of 2,698,000 persons employed by the WPA, or 82,177, were in supervisory capacities. One-third, roughly, of these, came from relief rolls, exclusive of New York City. Thus about 56,000 jobs were given to persons "friendly" to the Administration and who "believe in WPA." It is on this group, political opposition strategists hold, that any sound attack on politics in WPA must be based, since no charges have as yet been substantiated that relief rolls themselves were limited to deserving Democrats.

Told by reporters of an attack yesterday afternoon by Senator Frederick Steiwer (Republican), Oregon, on the WPA, in which Senator Steiwer asserted that the New Deal has "Tammanized" relief, Hopkins laughed, saying:

"Tongue in His Cheek."

"That's poppycock. He doesn't really mean that. As a matter of fact, I know he doesn't really feel all that. Steiwer's quite a fellow, you know. These boys have to make speeches this year, and he said that with his tongue in his cheek."

He declined to comment on charges of Senator James J. Davis (Republican), Pennsylvania, and on those of Senator Rush Holt (Democrat), West Virginia.

During the conference Hopkins said the latest WPA figures showed that on March 28, 2,877,197 persons were employed by the WPA, a total of 88,000 less than the week before, representing the huge slashes now being made in the relief program.

For the entire works and relief program, including all agencies, he said a total of 3,820,946 persons were employed at the end of the week of which they will be introduced from the stage. All of the trimmings of a Hollywood premiere will prevail.

Senator Ashurst, of Arizona, plays the only adult role in this all-local movie, with Dorothy Wilson and James Pendergrast, both of Western High School, filling the major roles. Other principal parts are played by Marion Stanley, of Tech High School; Murray Schwartzman, of Central; Oliver L. Watkins, of Eastern High School; Rose Goddes, of Roosevelt High; La Nelle Avery, of Central; Nettie Gerstein, of Roosevelt; Jessica Levine, of Crowell Academy, and Eva Lee Dearing. Many others have small roles.

In addition to "It Happened in Washington" the Palace will present its regular screen feature, "The Bohemian Girl," a comedy with Laurel and Hardy. The premiere of the local film is scheduled for 8:30 o'clock Saturday night, while the gala ceremonies preceding it will be conducted in the theater lobby at 8 o'clock.

March 21, a drop of 25,000 from the week before that date.

The expenditure figures show that the WPA has incurred obligations totaling $869,000,000 as of March 10, and has actually spent $647,000,000. Spending is continuing at the rate, roughly, of $180,000,000 per month, and will go down steadily from this point on.

Trolley Hurts Fatal to Brown; Traffic Toll 23

Man Was Hit After Hospital Visit to Invalid Wife Three Weeks Ago.

Injuries suffered when he was struck by a street car shortly after a visit to his invalid wife in Providence Hospital caused the death in the same hospital Wednesday of Walter P. Brown, 66, of 4515 Illinois avenue northwest.

Brown was injured when crossing Pennsylvania avenue near Second street southeast. He was taken to Providence Hospital but his wife, who has been ill there since November, was not informed of the accident because of a heart ailment.

Brown, suffering from a fractured skull, remained in a critical condition for nearly three weeks. His death brings the 1936 traffic toll for the District to 23.

His only survivor is his wife, Margaret McGinnis Brown. She will be unable to attend the funeral services, which will be held at St. Gabriel's Catholic Church, at 9:30 tomorrow. Burial will be in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

The couple came to Washington from Petersburg, Va., about 35 years ago. Mr. Brown was employed as a proofreader for the firm of Judd and Detweiler. He was a member of the Knights of Columbus.

Auto Fatalities Here for March Decline Sharply

Figures Give D. C. Chance to Get in Select List of Safety Cities.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Washington is well on its way to become one of the Nation's leading traffic safety cities for 1936.

Accident fatalities, records revealed yesterday, dropped from 11 in March, 1935, to 5 last month. The number of personal injuries and minor crashes decreased accordingly.

Comparing March of this year to the same month last year, figures showed a drop in injuries from 383 to 259. The accident trend dropped from 827 to 647. The same was true of property damage, with cases decreasing from 482 in March of last year to 394 during the past month.

Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer, pointing with renewed hope to current records, said conditions continued to improve in spite of a 7,500 increase in automobile registrations since March, 1935.

"Relentless campaigns against the reckless driver and strict enforcement of traffic regulations," Van Duzer declared, "has awakened the motoring public to greater observance of street safety practices. Newspaper publicity of our efforts to control highway lawlessness, he declared, were presented to the meeting as examples of what can be done to cut traffic tolls."

Meanwhile, plans to install pedestrian "walk" lights at major downtown intersections are nearing completion. A system of pedestrian control was urged recently during hearings before the House Traffic sub-committee.

While discussing present traffic problems yesterday, Van Duzer revealed a startling situation within his department. "Every District motorist is required to know traffic regulations before obtaining a permit. But there is not an available book of traffic regulations in the city."

Police and traffic officials have copies for their own use. The Police Department and Van Duzer's office, however, are unable to furnish regulation texts to motorists applying for permits.

"We have had no books of traffic regulations for more than three months," said Van Duzer. "Despite recent revisions, there have been no printings of these books in two years."

"When a motorist or District resident requests a book of regulations we are forced to admit we have none. It is the same way all over town. There is not an available book in any of the police precincts."

Lack of funds for printing was blamed by Van Duzer. Officials at the District auditor's office were unable to say when money will be appropriated for additional pamphlets.

"It is a disgrace to Washington," said one police official. "Here we are preaching traffic safety—demanding that drivers become familiar with the regulations—and yet when they apply for books we can't furnish them."

Truck Collides With Trolley; Motorman Hurt

Driver of Sand Vehicle Is Seized After Crash at 18th, Columbia Rd.

Hoy Shank, 48, of 1536 A street northeast, street car motorman, was treated at Emergency Hospital yesterday for several fractured ribs and head bruises when his car was in collision with a sand truck at Eighteenth street and Columbia road northwest.

Stuart Bowls, 30, of Burkettsville, Md., driver of the truck, and his colored helper, Charles Ambush, were uninjured.

The street car struck the truck head-on when Bowls tried to turn his truck into a side street. Bowls, taken to the Tenth Precinct Station, was charged with reckless driving.

Two driving permits were revoked and 23 others suspended for temporary periods yesterday by the revocations board.

Those who lost their licenses for speeding are Morris Johnson, 1419 Swann street northwest, 50 miles; Charles W. Padgett, 4102 Grant street northeast, 70 miles.

Thirty-day suspensions went to Harvey M. Linn, 1419 Forty-fourth street northwest, 40 miles; Thomas O. May, 413 Albee street northwest, 40 miles; Ready McRay, 3033 Sixteenth street northwest, 46 miles; Harold P. Mikulas, 203 B street northwest, 40 miles; Louis Norman, 3510 Fourteenth street northwest, 45 miles; Clifford Pissanti, 2836 Robinson place southeast, 40 miles; Aster Pridgen, 1822 Thirteenth street northwest, 40 miles; William L. Pruitt, 1034 Sixteenth street northwest, 40 miles; Oliver G. Saller, 2544 Seventeenth street northwest, 44 miles; William C. Southerland, 3220 Seventeenth street northwest, 45 miles.

Fifteen-day suspensions went to William Jewell, 1919 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, 36 miles; Wesley C. Mock, Jr., 4624 Forty-third street northwest, 38 miles; Anthony Narratti, 3125 Mount Pleasant street northwest, 36 miles; Arthur P. Owen, Takoma, Park, Md., 36 miles; George A. Petrella, 216 G street northeast, 38 miles; David A. Popka, 1119 Fifteenth street northwest, 36 miles; Peter Rockwell, 120 C street northeast, 36 miles; Martin Rubin, 1518 Thirty-fifth street northwest, 36 miles; Benjamin Saylor, 1200 Kennedy street northwest, 36 miles; George A. Seizo, 1532 Wisconsin avenue northwest, 36 miles; Howard Smith, 904 Benth street southeast, 38 miles; William R. Thompson, 4615 Ninth street northwest, 36 miles; Jenny E. Turnbull, 1870 Wornum avenue northwest, 36 miles; Joseph R. Turner, 1707 Capitol avenue northeast, 38 miles; George N. Banker, 1346 Monroe street northeast, 38 miles.

Mr. Wallace Must Choose.

Presumably Secretary Wallace was wincing when he told newspapermen that "if we make the benefit payments public, somebody might come along and kidnap the farmer's daughter." Nevertheless, his remark is close to an admission that some favored individuals have grown wealthy through AAA subsidies financed by consumption taxes on the necessities of life.

It is true, of course, that insurance companies and mass-producing agricultural corporations which are thought to have obtained enormous payments from the Treasury were "playing the game under the rules then in effect." No one has charged that these payments were irregularly made. Secretary Wallace knows very well that it is not the administration of the law which is being challenged. What is questioned is the policy behind a law which permits sufficient benefits from the public treasury to place recipients on the list of eligibles in the kidnapping racket.

No effort to imitate Jimmy Walker will conceal the necessity for securing the information sought by Senator Vandenberg. It is amazing that Secretary Wallace should be inaugurating another $470,000,000 farm program without himself knowing what part of the previous outlay has been granted to farm operators having no conceivable need of special benefits. Attempts to defend this ignorance of facts vital to the new farm program, by trying to draw a parallel with the confidential treatment of income tax returns, are not as funny as Mr. Wallace seems to think.

He has to choose, and that pretty soon, between satisfying this legitimate request, or tacitly admitting that he is afraid to do so.

Footnote For History.

Following the air trail blazed by the Graf Zeppelin, the huge Von Hindenburg is now nosing its leisurely way toward Brazil. Dr. Hugo Eckener has declared it arduous; rotagraves sections have pictured its luxurious trappings, and statisticians have disseminated pages of data regarding the new dirigible. For the time being, this is the last word in man's effort to conquer the air.

Though most of the Von Hindenburg's passengers are German, there are also three Americans, two Britons, a Swede, a Spaniard and a Brazilian. By day and by night, through storms and over them, these travelers compose a little world. Except for the wireless, each passenger is completely separated from his past and future. But background, prejudices and inherent traits are factors not so easily shaken off, even when man cruises through celestial spaces.

Though in a lighter-than-air ship, national feeling among such a cosmopolitan group might easily become heavy and heated at times. But there is said to be a tacit agreement among the passengers to avoid all controversial subjects, even when the radio brings them right into the zeppelin's lounge. And in a spirit of camaraderie, evening clothes have been forsworn. It is a quaint commentary on human nature that it should insist upon escape from the bed of our times under circumstances which only our times have been able to produce.

Camouflaging Failure.

Collapse of the movement to restrict the powers of the Supreme Court is a salutary indication that Congress is regaining its sense of proportion in dealing with this issue. The shelving of bills aimed at the court is variously explained. No time is available for their consideration at this session. Action now might embroil the court and its function in politics. But behind these arguments is the more compelling realization that the bills couldn't be enacted any way.

It would certainly be disastrous to make the Supreme Court a political issue. To have one party lined up against the court, and the other for it, would drag that body into an intolerable atmosphere. The status of the court is closely related to the preservation of a constitutional form of government, as the American people understand that term. Modification of its powers implies thorough deliberation of a non-partisan character, and the consent of a large majority of the people.

During a Presidential election year questions of this sort may well be left entirely dormant. Substantially to change the status of the court, a constitutional amendment would doubtless be essential. Experience has shown the virtual impossibility of securing amendments through partisan campaigns. And even if that course were practicable, it would be highly undesirable. The basic law should be changed only in response to widespread popular demand, and not at the behest of a single party.

As a concomitant to the discard of these measures, Congress might well consider ways and means of avoiding the enactment of further unconstitutional legislation. Constructive reforms could be undertaken in this field without danger of partisan controversy.

The Will And The Way.

In spirit, the German reply to the suggestions made by the Locarno powers on March 20 is a thoroughly constructive document. The problem now will be to secure from the Reich the practical guarantees necessary to make its interesting suggestions really effective. If British diplomacy can accomplish this task, bridging the chasm which separates the French and German viewpoints, the path of Europe will be set toward peace. Otherwise, there will be very little hope in prospect.

It is unfortunate that the first part of the German note, handed to the British government by Ambassador von Ribbentrop on Wednesday, is so full of sophistries and so devoid of subtlety. There is a pathetically unconscious irony in the statement that last Sunday's voting showed the German people determined "to preserve their freedom under all circumstances." There is a similar ponderous self-deception in the labored effort to prove that because a demilitarized Rhineland was not specified in President Wilson's Fourteen Points, this provision of the Treaty of Versailles was "based on a breach of an assurance made to Germany."

If that ridiculous reasoning is intended as an effort to marshal American opinion on the German side, it will fail utterly. There is too clear an understanding in this country that the German government in 1925, under no duress whatsoever, voluntarily accepted the provisions of the Locarno treaties which Germany would now like to disown without further argument.

All of this clumsy preamble is of a piece with the tactics whereby Hitler has tried to deceive the German people on the complicated issues at stake. It parallels in the field of diplomacy the political naivete which makes Dr. Fuchrer regard the recent framed plebiscite as "a solemn and general mandate from the German people." But it would be a pitiful mistake for the other Locarno powers merely to concentrate on the first part of the German reply.

In the second part of the document, where a large number of concrete and promising proposals are made by the German government, lies its real significance. These proposals indicate a willingness on the part of the Third Reich to agree to any form of international supervision, and to join any collective undertaking, in which Germany is treated as a complete equal with the nations victorious in the World War. There is absolutely no reason to suspect the sincerity of these proposals. And there is much evidence to confirm the German contention that a crisis is at hand in which Europe must finally decide between continuing a division between "nations regarded as honorable and dishonorable," and a truly co-operative effort toward building an enduring peace between equals.

The issue, therefore, really boils down to a definition of the temporary, yet effective, safeguards which should fairly be afforded the neighbors of Germany, while the far-reaching steps which that nation properly regards as necessary for ultimate solution, are being prepared. One such temporary safeguard is found in the military alliance of the Locarno powers which the British government is now prepared to implement. As a temporary defensive measure, Germany, after her violation of the Locarno treaties, has no right to object to this step. The French, on the other hand, have no right to ask that such an alliance shall be more than a provisional measure calculated to give security during the difficult period of negotiation now to be anticipated.

It is reasonable to regard the suggestions of the Locarno powers on March 20, and the reply of the German government on April 1, as two opposite extremes between which eventual compromise may be expected. And if the first of these documents is viewed as asking the maximum from Germany, and if the current reply is viewed as a minimum offer by Germany, there is no reason to feel that the attainment of something approaching a golden mean is impossible.

It may be hoped that the French government will now avoid any narrowly legalistic insistence on the exaction of the letter of the bond. The uncertain attitude of Italy in this crisis, and the not unconnected decision of the Austrian government to violate its treaty obligations by reintroducing conscription, make it doubly advisable that the French temper their strong legal position with a truly realistic appreciation of the European situation as a whole.

The problem of the French government now is not rendered easier by the approaching election. But one of the helpful suggestions in the German note is that discussion on certain phases of future Franco-German relations might be deferred until after the French people go to the polls. That voting will undoubtedly show that the French favor peace. The German note emphasizes that the election in the Reich last Sunday demonstrated the same objective on the part of the German people. Thus, the problem really resolves itself into one of diplomatic good will throughout difficult and protracted negotiations. Such good will, considering the magnitude of the stakes at issue, can scarcely be denied.

Another Blantonism.

In deliberating upon the latest insult from Representative Blanton, members of the Board of Education may not have recalled Kipling's advice about keeping your head when other are "losing theirs and blaming it on you." Nevertheless, they are entitled to a large measure of commendation for the dignified way in which they put the advice of the poet to the test. In the face of extreme provocation the board has maintained its poise and sense of humor in a way that makes the father of the Little Red Rider appear almost unusually ridiculous.

The purpose of Mr. Blanton's inquisition is evident. He would like to obtain directly from the Board of Education some shred of evidence that the District schools are subjected to what he would like to call subversive influences. Failing in that, he would like to make Congress believe that the board has something to conceal. In either event he would have a talking point which, with sufficient shouting, cursing and disregard of facts, might conceivably be twisted into something passing for argument in behalf of continued Nazi tactics toward local education.

In sending his ludicrous questions to Superintendent Ballou, over whose policies he has no shred of personal control, Mr. Blanton apparently did not hesitate to misrepresent his authority. The evidence that a majority of the committee for which he claimed to speak knew nothing of his letter is not surprising. As a follow-up to the recent "gentleman's agreement" with Police Chief Brown, the strategy was quite in character.

Every member of the Board of Education must have resented the impertinent and unauthorized questionnaire of Mr. Blanton. That agency had the alternative of defying an absurd request, which would obviously have led to misrepresentation, or of complying in a dignified way. By following the latter course the board has not only prevented distortion of the facts. It has also helped to educate Washington as to the stature of the gentleman from Abilene. In both achievements the board is entitled to the hearty thanks of the community.

Major Berry's Blunder.

By announcing his intention to organize a league of labor supporters of President Roosevelt, Industrial Co-ordinator Berry has destroyed his usefulness as an official charged with the responsible mission of seeking to solve some of the regulatory problems that affect both labor and capital. Maj. Berry's new political activities would disqualify him for public office in any capacity, but in his present position it is especially important that he keep clear of partisan politics. He can now no longer expect representatives of employing groups to rely upon his protestations of fairness and impartiality.

Any real friend of labor who sympathizes with the desire to retain the benefits of shorter hours, protection for children and other benefits obtained under the NRA codes, will deplore the rash action of the Industrial Co-ordinator in making an open bid for labor's political support. Judged even from a strictly partisan point of view his tactics are bungling. By closely associating himself with John L. Lewis, protagonist of industrial unionism, he is almost certain to alienate President Green and the supporters of craft unionism, even assuming that they are willing to abandon their policy of political nonintervention.

It is easy to see why anyone interested in perpetuating the system of collective bargaining, established under NRA codes, would be desirous of promoting the spread of industrial unionism. It is not only better suited to the needs of large-scale modern industry than the craft union, it is also better able to become a political force in the economic society that produces it. Nevertheless, instead of inciting the leaders of the large industrial unions to make their political influence felt in the coming election, Maj. Berry should be concentrating his attention upon doing his difficult administrative job.

As Industrial Co-ordinator, Major Berry could have performed a highly useful function as mediator between the heads of organized industries and of organized labor, emphasizing their joint obligations to society and stressing the value of enforceable contracts. By throwing in his lot with one side for purposes not germane to his office he has forfeited his right to serve in his present post.

In days gone by a politician could get by with two hats—one to throw in the ring and one to talk through. But now he requires a third hat—to pull rabbits out of.

A man haled before court spoke a language none of 30 interpreters could understand. It was probably Negro dialect as written by a Yankee author.

A naturalist doesn't believe that fish have any means of communication. We had noticed that they rarely respond to lines we drop them.

A scientist asserts that life began in hot water. It seems to be holding its own.

It's a toss-up as to which is the bigger liar: A politician or a seed catalog.

Unfortunate Coincidence.

Letters To The Editor.

In Defense Of Gambling.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In Sunday's issue of the New York Times were published extracts from an address given by Bishop Manning at St. Bartholomew's Church, followed by further smug admonitions from "Social Service" sources in reference to the proposed legalization of lotteries by the State.

We are requested to consider the morally unsound and "anti-Christian" effect of this proposal, and the possible harm it might bring to the "needy classes." Social Service takes second money with a dire danger signal as to our approving the fatuous philosophy of getting something for nothing.

One of the great failures of the church is the inability to recognize and guide the harmless instincts of mankind, to chain those eager and quaking feet with a herd of ignorant dullards intent on being driven only down one dusty road and oblivious to the charm around them, of adventure, of gaiety, and the joy of hazard.

We are so frequently and blandly told just what Christ would have done, what he would think, etc., but where among men is the real knowledge or authority? In that short and starry life—less than half the ordinary span—that was the life of Christ, who can tell what he ultimately might or might not have done? Most assuredly he was the friend of the needy, but not with that patronizing and grudging charity of the church and social services.

These, more than money, need the endowment of what Bergson terms the elan vital, that intuitive spark, the light of which enables man to sift the true from the false, to direct his energies to the real wrongs and injustices of life instead of creating technical bogies to froth over and "denounce." I do not strictly belong to those who the Bishop could class as "needy." I am not a gambler; I am not a red-merely "reactionary" and old-fashioned enough to demand the right of any normal and sane adult to manage their own purse strings and actions.

If it should please me to be a free tramp, touring the by-ways and hedges, instead of a pedant confined with every luxury between its narrow walls I would prefer to claim the former right. It should please me to place my dollar on a lottery, a race, or even a cock fight, I also claim that trivial right.

The Duties Of An Audience.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I should like to express an opinion of the behavior of Washington audiences in attendance at local theaters, with particular reference to the National Theater. It is my hope that some exposition of the subject may be given publicly on the editorial pages of your paper.

Any person attending the recent opening of the play, "Winterset," at the National must certainly have been first annoyed and then indignant at the continued discourtesy shown both the actors in the play and the patrons of the theater by certain sections of the audience. Any reasonably considerate person would refrain from attending a play when suffering from a cough which could not be controlled, rather than subject those seated near him to continued discomfort. It is obvious that to enjoy a play one must hear the lines.

All communications must carry the writer's name and address, though pen names are permitted at the Editor's discretion. In fairness to other correspondents, brevity is requested. Letters are subject to condensation.

Not only incessant coughing, but constant rustling, moving about and whispering marred the sensitive presentation of a fine play on Monday night of this week. Obviously a large proportion of the audience was not in sympathy with, or did not understand, the play. It is unfortunate that those people who were obliged to view it under inauspicious circumstances.

Progress In Mexico.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Those of your readers who take more than a passing interest in events below the Rio Grande will wish to commend your Mexico City correspondent's estimate of the administration of President Cardenas to date. The articles printed in The Post of March 29 and 30 presented a fair and impartial picture free from special consideration.

I should like to elaborate on one of two points mentioned by Mr. Paul in his evaluation. It was fortunate that Cardenas broke the grip of "callismo" without bloodshed. Furthermore, his policy of "spending on Mexicans first and taking care of foreigners later" is wiser than American and other foreign holders of Mexico's bonds might suspect. A vast potential market for manufactured articles exists in Mexico, and by improving the purchasing power of the Mexicans we can sell them more goods and thus create additional revenue from import duties with which to reduce the payment of interest on the public debt.

Finally, the Laredo-Mexico City highway will be a new gateway to that country's unique scenic and architectural beauties. In the words of an American architect who has advocated using the Maya inspiration in Mexico, the tourist in Mexico will enjoy "a time of enchantment and of day-dreaming"—a perfect antidote for the wanderlust fever!

How To Live On $1,440 A Year.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Some letters on Government salaries exhibit a peculiar viewpoint. It could exist nowhere but in Washington. They ask: How can the Government expect you to get married on $1,440? First, the Government doesn't expect you to. Second, it's much easier than on $700 for the same work outside.

Another answer is: Forget the numbers and nags. Learn to walk or bicycle. Forget that motor car while. Develop a financial sense. Put some jack in the building and loan, savings bank, the old sock, or securities on the bargain counter. May I foist my own experience on a pliant universe? I snagged a Government job in 1921, following a second hitch in the Army that included the war. My stake was $400, due to my skill as a black-jack player. Of my $1,400 minus salary (it has never topped $1,500 except on sales work outside during several separations), I put aside 400 berries. In three years I bought a tin tank for street navigation. Nor did I live the life of a recluse. Got married at 31, bought a $4,000 house in Maryland, not a $10,000 "quantity" mansion in some beautiful row.

Of course, if I'd got married on the blackboard dough in '21 I'd be a candidate for relief now, have furrows on my noble pan, be full of yaps against anyone getting $500 more than myself.

I'll venture the dumb but positive judgment that much of the relief expense here is directly due (aside from the New Deal and emigrated cotton pickers due to cotton curtailments) to this very policy of too many in a family receiving monthly Government dols.

Why yelp because a few Senators and Representatives get $10,000? Their number is infinitesimal compared with the number of Government hands. Some of those legislators, believe it or disbelieve it, would get much more outside.

The young chap with a $1,440 job is extremely lucky today. He can assure his future in four or five years. Or he can make a complete mess and come up with an aged relative plant at the end of that time.

Utopia Via Townsendism.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: What with all the veterans of future wars and profit of future wars, why not a Townsend Plan. The Townsend Plan, at least to my way of thinking, is much more feasible than either of the other two, as: My father is 53 at present, and in seven years will be 60, when he will be eligible for a pension of $200 per month. Two hundred dollars per month is quite a fair sum to the average family and should my father get that amount, there wouldn't be much sense in either of us working. We could get along quite well on that.

And three years after my father is 60, my mother will be 60, too, and that'll mean another $200 or a total for the two of $400. If $200 is enough for us to get along on, just think of what $400 would do for us. They should both live up until the time that the writer, who is 30 at present, would be eligible for this pension. Thus, no one in our family would have to work ever. We would all support one another on the pension. The other taxpayers who have no families would pay our way practically forever. Not bad, eh?

Yours for a bigger (?) and better (?) Townsend Plan, JOHN ELLIS.

A Court For Children.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am enthusiastically in favor of the bill regarding the Juvenile Court which has been introduced into the House of Representatives by Mrs. Norton, of New Jersey. I have read it through carefully, and the thing which most favors it so thoroughly is that it sets the child in the midst. That is, it makes the welfare of the child, the training of the child, the reclaiming of the child the paramount thing. It strips away a lot of legal red tape and allows nothing to get in the way of what is best for the child. It is indeed child-centered, and not court-centered.

I cannot imagine any enactment being more sympathetic or understanding in the matter of juvenile delinquency. It makes the Juvenile Court what it ought to be, not a symbol of the clutches of the law, but of the loving arms of parenthood at its best, even though these arms must sometimes suggest discipline and restraint.

Much Sound Theory In NRA.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Can it be that The Post is now adopting the underlying philosophy of the New Deal after having for so long been extremely critical of it? In your editorial against the Patman chain store bill on March 27, I find this: "Industries could, under voluntary agreements, deal effectively with price discrimination and other distributive problems of an anti-social character. With intelligent and co-operative governmental supervision to prevent exploitation of the public, or of other producing and distributing groups, they could be left to solve their own problems or be permitted to fight them out to public advantage." If you will reverse the NRA act as I recently had occasion to do, you will see that that is exactly what the NRA purported to do. Sure, The Post would not want to be found guilty of suggesting, of all things, another NRA! Yet, in view of the above quotation, are you convicted, so to speak, of your own mouth?

Answer: The Next Generation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: What next? First they cultivated our sense of finance with a game, then they created pastimes whose functions, besides entertainment, were to teach us banking and real estate.

Last night my son came home from school with a new diversion, prettily boxed, and called "Politics." So they're going to teach us politics, are they? If all of us become politicians, who will there be left to pay the taxes?

The Post Impressionist

Proofs Of Popularity.

Post Office, Friday.

DURING its more than two years of sunny existence, this Column has conscientiously touched upon nearly all those topics which, at its inception, it was thought to leave severely alone. Thus far, however, we have spared the social page.

Now the time has come for that. In our official capacity, we are indulging in more and more social activities. And, if we don't chronicle them, nobody will.

Two recent meals demand recording. . . . Yes, we know it is Lent. This Column endeavors to observe the fast. But, to a man in our public position, certain festive engagements—be they never so pleasant—are also business duties.

One of the most charming luncheons of the season was that given last Monday at a well-known Italian restaurant near I and Seventh streets northwest. The hosts were the editorial staff of The Infantry Journal; the guest was the Post-Impressionist of The Washington Post.

The room was beautifully garlanded. Wallpaper covered all four walls, and curtains hung at the windows. The table decorations consisted of a spring display of glasses, delicately blended.

In proposing the (first) health of the guest of honor, Lieut. Col. E. F. Harding, Infantry, editor of The Infantry Journal, took occasion to say that he considered, and that he was sure the entire staff of The Infantry Journal considered, The Washington Post a highly civilized newspaper, and the Post-Impressionist's Column the most civilized ornament upon all the high brow of The Washington Post.

The Post-Impressionist, replying by proposing the health of Col. Harding and his staff, admitted the second of Col. Harding's soft impeachment and did not deny the first. He (the Post-Impressionist) said that he did not hesitate to affirm, without fear of contradiction by any person within sound of his voice, that The Infantry Journal was his favorite magazine, and he deeply pledged himself to use his best endeavors to have it given a worthy rating in the Directory of Magazines of the Authors' League of America, Inc.

Among those present were: Lieut. Col. E. F. Harding, Infantry, editor of The Infantry Journal; Lieut. Charles J. Lanham, associate editor of The Infantry Journal. Also noted was: The Post-Impressionist.

The prevalent note of the costumes was much. The Post-Impressionist wore a symphony in blue; light blue soft shirt, dark blue bow tie with white polka-dots, and dark blue flannel saque suit, herring-bone weave with invisible stripe.

One of the most charming luncheons of the season was that given last Saturday in the Oak Room of a Pennsylvania avenue hotel. The host was the Washington Classical Club, composed of members of the classical faculties of the District's universities, colleges and schools; the guest was the Post-Impressionist of The Washington Post.

The garnishes of the apartment were similar to those at the charming luncheon given to the same guest by the editorial staff of The Infantry Journal.

In introducing the Post-Impressionist as the guest speaker, Dr. Charles S. Smith, formerly dean of the classical department of George Washington University, said that one of the most fortunate things which had recently happened to him was the reading of a certain column, on a classical topic, in The Washington Post. For this event, said Dr. Smith, not only enlightened him on certain phases of Greek literature in the fourth century, A. D., but also resulted in his acquaintance with the scholarly author of the article in question.

It was, Dr. Smith said, no common occurrence to meet a columnist who had a vivid interest in not to say knowledge of fourth century Greek literature. But the esteem in which a not undistinguished portion of the Capital's population held this particular columnist was testified to by the presence of this audience.

This columnist, as they well knew, Dr. Smith declared, played upon a lute of many strings—ancient and modern, grave and gay, sacred and profane. His identity had been too long hidden behind the mask of anonymity, and Dr. Smith now took pleasure in presenting the Post-Impressionist in person.

The Post-Impressionist spoke for 45 minutes upon Greek literature in the fourth century.

The Washington Classical Club attended in a body. Also among those present was The Post-Impressionist.

The prevalent note of the costumes was somewhat more modern than classical. The Post-Impressionist wore a symphony in blue; dark blue soft shirt, dark blue bow tie with white polka-dots, and dark blue flannel saque suit, herring-bone weave with invisible stripe.

H Hitler in Britain.

THIS is your correspondent's second visit to England since the return of the year, and it has been interesting to see the extent to which Adolf Hitler has split British public sentiment by aping the manners of the civilized races in certain circumstances.

Beginning with a great pilgrimage of Nazi football fans to London for an international soccer match three months ago, Der Fuehrer has crowded every opportunity for the cheap, superficial appeal to the sentimental weaknesses of the British, and the result by now is a tolerance for a regime of massacre and torture, fraud and conspiracy against the world.

The normal feelings of the British, with their honest courts, free elections and liberty of thought, speech and press were plainly spoken when Hitler and the Brown Shirt racketeers of his original mob first took over. To the British this naturally was a loathsome state of affairs and revived their old war-time contempt for the character of a people whose only discipline was force, whose only moral law was their own desires.

There was nothing they could do about it, but Hitler obviously suffered from this harsh opinion of a rich, superior and somewhat snobbish nation and yearned for social recognition, so to speak. There was a faint nod in his direction in the speech last year by the Prince of Wales, now King of England, in which he proposed a better understanding between the peoples and the international soccer match impressed his aspiring nature like an invitation to dinner with his betters.

TEN THOUSAND selected Nazis were expected to London for a great political demonstration, and although they were put upon their manners before they left and warned to conduct themselves like civilized people, the realm leader overlooked the fact that they had no manners and could not act like sportsmen only by conscious imitation.

In their moments of unguarded naturalness they were only Nazis, after all, flaunting their pinwheel flag symbolizing the dizzy state of mind, banging their heels together and singing their patriotic song to Horst Wessel, a national hero who lived on the earnings of street-walkers.

Nevertheless, by rigid discipline and the threat of the concentration camps on their return to that freedom which Hitler gave them in Germany, they were able to affect a certain pretense which the British, through their newspapers, were glad to exploit as a marvelous paradox. To them it had been an amusing spectacle, like that of a stage baboon in a dress suit using a knife and fork.

The illness and death of King George pressed two new opportunities to make social capital, and Hitler, like an old-time fight manager in the "no-decision" days, was first to the wire with his telegrams of solicitude and condolence, respectively. To them it had been an amusing spectacle, like that of a stage baboon in a dress suit using a knife and fork.

IN moving his army from the winter Olympic games to the Rhine, Hitler put the British to a test too great for the devotion of any people. He faced them with a new war with all its familiar horrors in defense of a mere principle. It was different in 1914, when the Germans lit out to sea, where they would have dug themselves out permanently as conquerors in a position to threaten the little isle and dispute the Channel.

Furthermore the Germans were giving the British a hard wrestle for world markets in those days and the challenge to the nation could not be avoided, although the common man thought he was fighting for his ideals. In the present case, however, the British have looked for reasons to avoid a war without humiliation, and in casting about for something they have taken to blaming their old pals, the French, for bearing down too hard on the Nazis.

To blame France is to justify Hitler and to justify Hitler is to condone his works, so the Nazi regime enjoys some prestige from the present situation. Then, too, as much as the British accuse the French, they in turn find themselves criticized in the French newspapers, the whole business tending to weaken this front and to assist Hitler just that much.

THE British, of course, know all about the fury of the domestic regime in Germany, having read a thousand details or seen the terror themselves. But, like vice, the monster, Hitlerism, has become a familiar figure in Europe and has lost its power to shock.

On the other hand, the British are impressed by acts of civility, which come so strangely from the Nazis. Thus, at the present moment, they are not even amused by the absurdity of the Hitler election—so farcical compared to one of their own.

3 Held as Revolt Plot Is Uncovered in Bolivia

La Paz, Bolivia, April 2 (P).—Police officials announced today they had discovered a revolutionary plot prepared by leaders of the "Genuine Republican" Party.

They arrested for deportation Jose Gabino Villanueva, Enrique Hertzog and Eustaquio Bilbao, and said they were seeking Joaquin Espada.

The authorities said the alleged plotters had secreted a great quantity of arms and ammunition and had prepared a campaign of violence against the government.

Il Duce's Two Horses

Mussolini Hedged Shrewdly To Gain Either All Ethiopia Regardless Of League Or Part Of Ethiopia With Geneva's Consent.

By the Countess Listowel,
Social Correspondence of the Post.

THE Abyssinian "dispute" has a good many strange aspects. One of the strangest is Signor Mussolini's relations with the League of Nations. In spite of the disapproval of world opinion, in spite of having been declared the aggressor, in spite of the application of sanctions, Italy has not retired from Geneva. Il Duce scoffs at the League; he allows his press to abuse it. But Italy remains a member. Mussolini's reasons for staying in the League of Nations are twofold. And both are very illuminating as to his long-range policy.

When Japan set out on the conquest of Manchuria, and successfully bullied and beat China, it also met with world censure, but not with sanctions. Sir John Simon, then British Foreign Secretary, in Japanese eyes made the best possible justification of Japan's case at Geneva. Yet, when triumphant Japan retired from the League, it attracted no followers, but only contempt.

When Germany set out to achieve "complete equality" and lost patience with the dragging Disarmament Conference, she had much sympathy abroad. Everywhere many people resented the treatment meted out to the Reich from 1919 to 1933. Hitler resigned from the League because the great powers temporized instead of implementing the "theoretical" equality conceded to his predecessor. The friends of peace and collective action were disconsolate. Other victims of the last war, Austria, Hungary and Bulgaria, were jubilant. Yet Germany's exit from the League, instead of encouraging imitators, attracted Russia to Geneva's fold. Thus the blow struck at the League of Nations by the Nazi rulers was potentially counterbalanced.

The Italian dictator is a much more subtle diplomatist than either the German "opposite number," or the leaders of Japanese foreign policy. He is not going to break with the League if Geneva is going to prove an effective instrument—even at Italy's expense.

ABYSSINIA is a testing ground for the Fascist army. And the African campaign is also a welcome opportunity for realizing the Fascist economic system. Prior to this colonial war the Italian state had acquired no real sense of a number of industries, but also of the principal sources of industrial investment. With the outbreak of hostilities all foreign trade became state-controlled. A few weeks ago Il Duce nationalized the banks. On March 23 this was followed by measures nationalizing big industries.

But the Ethiopian war is also, and supremely, the test of collective action amongst the signatories of the Covenant of the League. And on that point the League, under English leadership, has scored. So Mussolini has reasoned that the period of triumph is not the time to desert Geneva. On the contrary, now will be the time for Italy to use Geneva. To achieve through the League that which the colonial ambitions of Abyssinia could never give to the Italians a thorough reshuffling of raw material and colonial possessions, perhaps also a fundamental resettlement of the central European situation, is the big idea.

It is the new, reinforced prestige of the League one development of eminent importance: England's co-operation in European affairs and English commitments, not merely in the west of Europe, but in the east. British policy has caused France to stand by the Little Entente since 1919, blocking necessary and just rectifications of the peace treaties. English "vagueness" has misled even Mussolini himself in assessing the chances of his Abyssinian aggression.

AFTER the application of sanctions, the Duce saw a new opportunity. Young Mr. Anthony Eden is a tremendous believer in the League and collective security. Let Great Britain, while he is foreign secretary, at last pledge herself openly to the support of the League Covenant, then revision of treaties will become a reality, then the mandates question can be raised, then raw material questions can be collectively discussed, and most important of all, then the Brenner Pass will be internationally guaranteed against German aggression. Next time, in case of a Nazi putsch, Italian troops need not march alone.

THE efficacy of the League, emphasized at Italy's expense, is thus admitted by any Fascist. Mussolini's prestige has suffered comparatively little only because of the manner in which sanctions have been handled. The oil sanctions, however, would have been more than the Italian public could have been made to swallow by Mussolini's clever propaganda. So there he put his foot down. In December he threatened war in case they were enforced. Sir Samuel Hoare fell victim to this bluff, but the bluff was called when Anthony Eden managed to obtain the open consent of all Mediterranean powers for the defense of the Covenant.

So, on the next occasion when oil sanctions came up for discussion, Il Duce threatened withdrawal from the League, and cancellation of the military agreement with France. Both very serious considerations for the Quai d'Orsay, but still a mighty different tune from "attack on the British fleet." The difference between these two threats measures the success of English diplomacy. The facts that oil sanctions were never enforced are the fruits of French diplomacy, seeking security against German aggression.

MUSSOLINI threatened to depart from the League. That threat was based on a well-considered plan. Italy was going to make the day of her withdrawal from Geneva a red letter day in the existence of the League. He was not going to commit the same mistakes as Japan and Germany, and leave "without consequences." So Il Duce, with great skill, prepared his ground. Hungary, Austria and Albania, were going to resign from Geneva at the same time. Greatest trump card of all: Germany was to be approached for the formation of a powerful Central European group, including Poland, thus uniting the "have-nots," and making the "haves" remaining within the League look like a mutual insurance society of the "capitalists" among nations. Japan would probably have been pleased to be extremely friendly with this Italian-German group.

The Nazi dictator upset all Mussolini's calculations. Hitler once more played what old-fashioned and polite diplomats call "a lone hand." He struck for the demilitarized zone of the Rhineland, thus wiping out the last shred of the Versailles "shame." But at the same time he offered a 25-year non-aggression pact with France and Belgium; new demilitarized zones on both the French and the Belgian borders; re-entry into the League; a pact, or pacts, with all Germany's neighbors; an air-pact to implement the new "Locarno."

Hitler was not going to gamble with "have-nots" who could give him nothing, except involve him in a world war. The "haves" might give him with at least part of his needs.

When Mussolini realized that instead of breaking up the League by getting out of it, his policy had served to draw Nazi Germany toward Geneva, he began to toy with the League's mediation offer to restore peace with Abyssinia. It would be a grave error to regard this as a defeat of Mussolini's "principles." He played his cards in a manner to leave every avenue open for Italy to make use of a reinforced League, whilst getting an "honorable" peace as the result of his military successes in Abyssinia.

Hitler's sudden upsetting offer to re-enter the League of Nations means an immense turning point in European history, as well as in that of the world. It also indicates that Mussolini sensed this imminent change in international relations, and was careful not to burn his bridges in Geneva too soon. There is a fair chance now for all European powers to re-settle around a council table. There is even a hope for negotiating a long-range agreement between Germany and France. Europe may be on the verge of the longest span of peace it has had for a century. And it is a tribute to Mussolini's foresight to have treated his League membership with a long view of international affairs.

He backed two horses: getting Abyssinia in spite of the League, or getting "a bit" of Abyssinia with the League. One or the other horse was bound to win. It would be indiscreet to guess which one Il Duce would have preferred.

Blanton! Why?

By Karl Schriftgiesser

Heil to the Dictator!

THOMAS LINDSAY BLANTON, the little man from Texas, put on his false Hitler mustache the other day, shouted "Heil Blanton!" thrice, and dictated a letter to the man he dislikes more than any other except Stalin, his fellow dictator. I refer, of course, to Comrade Ballou, the Commissioner of Education for the District, who has steadfastly refused throughout the battle over the little red rider to shave off the beard that makes him look for all the world like the sainted Lenin, patron saint of Washington school children.

This letter contained several questions calculated to prove by their answers that Comrade Ballou sits at the feet of the proletarian casting covetous glances at that den of communistic iniquity, Teachers College of Columbia University. Comrade Blanton dislikes and distrusts Columbia and all its Muscovite works. On the basis of the fact that Comrade Ballou once knew somebody who went to that college or is on speaking terms with a professor or two over there, he would drive from our midst the subversive Ballou and all his theories.

It has been suggested to your correspondent that he devise a questionnaire which would accomplish a similar result with the tempestuous Texas. That is a very large order. Blanton watched the sharp shafts of Maverick, the Magnificent and other Blanton bachelors leave him unscathed. It is doubtful in my mind if this inquisitorial method would bring the desired aims about. But anything is worth trying in a worthy cause, and what cause for Blanton. And so, with no malice, I present herewith several questions which may help to clear up the perennial question, "Why Blanton?"

1. Please advise whether you have not admitted that you would have failed of re-election to Congress the last time you ran if you had not the support of the Ku Klux Klan? Or, whether you campaign manager was a Grand Kleagle of that outfit.

2. Please advise whether, as watch dog of the treasury, you would appropriate for the District of Columbia $3,000,000 for a centennial celebration, as you did for your native State of Texas last session.

3. Please advise what Vice President Garner, as the then-Speaker of the House, made you promise when he named you to the apportionment committee? Was it something about your "keeping quiet?"

4. Why, despite your seniority in Congress, has the House never appointed you chairman of any important committee?

5. Is it true to evidence that you, a Washington landlord, are opposed to the Ellenbogen rent control bill?

6. Why do you use low and inexpensive District of Columbia tags instead of the more expensive Texas "Klans" plates?

7. Please advise if your sister, Prof. Annie Webb Blanton, of Texas University, was a student of Prof. Carl Becker, whose books you have tried to bar from Washington, when she was a student at Cornell.

8. Please advise whether your sister ever attended summer school at Columbia's Teachers College and if she did, have you ever been influenced by her views on social questions since then?

9. Please advise which, in your opinion as a Texan, is more to be desired, a red rider or a night rider?

10. Please advise how many Texas teachers ever attended Teachers College and how many of them back to the people of Abilene, and also if you think it is worth the cost?

11. Please advise how much of the taxpayers' money you estimate it costs per annum to print your Congressional masterpieces in the imperishable pages of the Congressional Record, and how much postage you save annually by franking them back to the people of Abilene, and also if you think it is worth the cost?

12. Please advise why, if you don't like us here, you don't go back where you came from.

THESE questions, I think, are fair. They are asked in no spirit of levity, but for the honorable purpose of eliciting information for your correspondent's magnum opus, on which he has been hard at work for these many months. When it is completed, it will be in 20 volumes, covering each year spent in Congress by the little man from Texas. It is based after Herkimer Johnson's great life work and will be known as "Why Blanton? Or, The Life and Times of a Modern Don Quixote." Already in its sixth volume of manuscript, answers to these questions are sorely needed. Mr. Blanton, with his great interest in education and scholarship, cannot fail to supply them.

Fingerprints Found, Are Almost Identical

Walla Walla, Wash., April 2 (P).—A case of almost identical fingerprints that may lead to court costs over the accepted method of identification was disclosed here today.

Chief of Detectives Norman Anspaugh said William Schmitt, 27, a farm laborer, arrested here, was taken to be Harley Falt, 28, also a farm worker, sought for his escape from the Boise, Idaho, State prison.

Only two points of difference were found in their fingerprint classifications in a final check, he said.

California's chief of the department of criminal identification, saying attorneys likely will cite the case in future, has requested complete records of the case.

Which One ... for 1936?

If America went to the polls today, which of the potential Presidential candidates would the Republicans select to represent the G. O. P. in the 1936 campaign?

In former campaign years, you have had to wait until the party convention to answer such a question.

But this year, by following the returns from the Nation-wide polls conducted by the American Institute of Public Opinion, you can know the popular strength of all of the leading candidates many weeks before the convention.

For instance, the up-to-the-minute standings of the leading contenders for the Republican nomination will be published in

$500,000,000 Limit Forecast For Flood Bill

Robinson Disclaims 'Pork Barrel' Aim in Reply to Post Editorial.

By the Associated Press.

Heartened by the assurance of Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, majority leader, that he would have no part in "pork barrel" flood control projects, Chairman Copeland (Democrat), New York, of the Senate Commerce Committee, predicted yesterday he could hold the omnibus flood bill to "less than half a billion."

The committee has tentatively accepted projects scattered over the country which would cost $385,000,000. War Department engineers are expected to bring in early next week another list costing $100,000,000 more. These projects are partially linked with power development.

Robinson made his position plain in a Senate speech replying to an editorial appearing in the Washington Post asserting he was "in the vanguard" of an effort to load the flood control bill with "pork projects," including a goodly number from his own State.

Claims 'Misconstruction.'

Any intimation that he was opposed to flood control projects in a recently devastated East, Robinson said, was a misconstruction of what he told the committee when he remonstrated against exclusion of Arkansas projects from the program drafted by the Army engineers.

He agreed it was essential to have engineering authority in support of the projects authorized by Congress. But insisted that those in the Arkansas district were connected with Mississippi flood control and had been approved by War Department engineers and the Mississippi River Commission.

They were omitted from the list chosen by the engineers at the request of the Commerce Committee, he said, "without any explanation of the palpable discrimination."

On the House side, Representative Snell, of New York, minority leader, expressed the hope that the flood control bill would be confined to emergency projects.

He did not want New York and Pennsylvania particularly and said he did not want the omnibus measure to become so large that it would be defeated by its own weight.

Postoffice Inspector Richard E. Eggleston, testifying against Maul and his associates, told Postoffice Department Solicitor General Karl Crowley that every buyer of a ticket in the Golden Stakes received a sheet on which were six cartoons. Under each picture was a list of 25 songs, one of which was supposed best to describe the cartoon. It was pointed out that there were 244,625 possible combinations of songs and pictures, indicating that the winner of the grand prize would need to be an expert musician, indeed.

Maul, who revealed that he was also the clerk of the "cabaret and dance" committee of the New York State Legislature, was the chief witness yesterday. When it was shown that the tickets he sold were strikingly similar to the tickets used in the Irish Hospital Sweepstakes, Maul stoutly maintained that he "had never so much as seen" an Irish sweep ticket. He declared, however, that he was a race-track frequenter, and that he had operated on such tracks as Tropical, Hialeah and Coney Island.

He testified he started the Golden Stakes after reading about contests operated by Mrs. Oliver Harriman, of Michigan, who recently led a fight to beat down further appropriations for the Florida ship canal, and to demand whether he was now embarking on the theory of assuming as a matter of Federal responsibility purely local flood control.

Robinson, asserted "conservation of the soil, reforestation, irrigation, flood control and navigation all go into one—all are intimately connected." Moreover, he insisted, power development was one with the others.

Thousands of dams must be built in all parts of the country, he said, regardless of costs running into "millions and millions."

Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, who recently led a fight to beat down further appropriations for the Florida ship canal, and to demand whether he was now embarking on the theory of assuming as a matter of Federal responsibility purely local flood control.

Robinson said his principal partner was Frank Erickson, New York bookmaker, and that they had organized Golden Stakes solely as a business enterprise, with no "charity" attachment.

"And as a money-making proposition it doesn't look so good right now," he said, answering a question propounded by Calvin W. Hassell, the prosecutor.

George Morton Levy, Maul's counsel, in questioning Maul, brought out that the tickets and letters sent through the mails had first been submitted to the Postoffice Department, and he inferred that departmental approval had been received.

The other witness called yesterday was Jay Wingate, an employee of the New York advertising agency which handled advertising for the scheme. Wingate testified that he had prepared several advertisements to be inserted in New York newspapers, but that he withdrew from the proposition because "it wasn't good business."

Young Smith was not called to the witness stand, but the hearing will be resumed today at 10 a. m., and he may testify, Smith listened closely all day. He smoked cigarettes incessantly. Looking not at all like his famous father, he wore a dark blue suit and a gray fedora hat.

Marilyn Miller Unchanged.

New York, April 2 (P).—The condition of Marilyn Miller, stage and screen star, suffering from a toxic condition, was announced by her physician, Dr. M. L. Whittman, as unchanged today.

'Swing Music' Session Is Set For Oak Room

Whoop-la Orchestra, With Toby Walker, Hot Pianist, at Raleigh.

By Chanticleer.

Here and there among the after-darkers: You can get the problem of "what is swing music" off your chest Sunday afternoon by going to the Oak Room, Raleigh Hotel, where a "swing music jam session" will be held. All the local exponents of whoop-la orchestration will be there with a special guest in Toby Walker, "hot" pianist.

Ask 20 band men what is "swing music" and you get 20 different answers ranging from "It's musician's music" to "The soul of rhythm" and such. Make up your own definition. I understand these Sunday afternoon sessions of the "Swing Club" at the Raleigh are really the grooviest. The boys all come with their trumpets and violins and the impromptu proceedings are authoritative. Yassah, you're invited.

Now they're talking about a new tune that ought to be written on the theme of "There's Something About the Shoreham." That would be inspired by the press representatives of that hostelry because of the shoreham's acknowledged dignity and quiet informality. And because Manager L. Gardner Moore has been notably successful in giving the citizenry what it wants in supper entertainment. Right now, if I were Manager Gardner, I'd proposition Tito Guizar, who is sojourning temporarily in Washington, for a week's engagement. That Mexican with his nice eyes, big broad shoulders and superlative voice would be a natural for the Shoreham ballroom. Happy birthday and all that sort of thing at the Shoreham. Instead of a new Spanish show to celebrate the week, Lorraine and Carlos remain. They clicked so well with the customers that they're the best birthday talent. Very special things going on all week, however. Next Monday, to be precise, the birthday cake will be cut. And songs with lyrics by Host Peter Borras.

That fellow Guy Scott is always up to something new and different and now it's really a wow for the 1936 edition. Absolutely and with-

One thing about Manager Frank McNeely at the Ambassador: Employing artists for the Hi-Hat doesn't bar the impromptu performances of talented guests. Early this week it was Mrs. Emma J. The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.

By Morgan Baker.

ONLY veteran NRA employees will be used in the final project at NRA, and they will be paid the customary Government salaries.

This was reported to have been made clear by Dr. Leon Marshall, former member of the NRA Board of Administration and more recently head of the NRA Division of Revision. In a committee of employees yesterday.

The trial balloon of the so-called security or starvation pay, eagerly watched by all the New Deal agencies, apparently has collapsed and the plan abandoned. Thus, the "45 or 50 experts" who will be placed on the "study to end all studies on the NRA" are assured of salaries ranging from $1,200 up. Inasmuch as this study will probably last until the report is due for the President January 1, 1937, and as there is only $100,000 available for the project from the WPA allotment, few salaries are expected to be above the $1,200 bracket.

Bermuda is attracting numerous Government employees over the Easter holidays. Among the latest steamship bookings reported are Gladys E. Jones (C), Division of Disbursement; Treasury; Rosemary Eyre, Mount Alto Hospital; Marie Becker, Division of Disbursement; and Agnes Dillman, Veterans Administration.

Bloom and Morris Win.
Paul E. Golden (P), Bureau of Standards, president of the Federal Bridge League, proudly announces that Col. Frank Bloom and R. Morris, members of the FWA team in the league, won top prize for North and South for Washington in the Culbertson International play.

Translators Mark Anniversary.
The Society of Federal Translators last week observed its sixth anniversary of its organization. Almost every Government department was represented at the dinner at the Cosmos Club, which marked the high point of the celebration.

Miss Gertrude W. Hollinger (P), Patent Office, principal speaker, was introduced by Paul Vogenitz, Postoffice, society, president. Miss Hollinger, in reviewing the society's progress, paid tribute to Burton H. Lamore, State, chairman of the reclassification committee. He was presented with a brief case as a token of appreciation from the members for his work on the committee.

Following the dinner, Kenneth F. Rogers, Postoffice, conducted a spelling bee, with Emerson B. Christie (C), State, winning first prize. Mr. Christie, incidentally, was first president of the society.

Charles F. Bassett, director of the United States Fur Animal Experiment Station, Biological Survey, in a lead just issued by that bureau, describes a new automatic drinking fountain for minks that has been developed at the station, which is located at Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

Careless Pedestrians.
What do the motorists in Washington need? Why more room, of course. And not so much speed.

There is no longer space for the parking of cars. So they need a short cut to the planet Mars.

Flood Forecasting.
Q. Can the Weather Bureau forecast floods?—Mrs. Lawrence G. Higgins (C).

A. According to M. W. Hayes, chief of the river and flood division of the Weather Bureau, the recent floods in the Atlantic seaboard and upper Ohio Valley caught no community by surprise. Warnings were issued hours—often a day or more—in advance. The warnings were based on flood forecasts issued by the Weather Bureau.

Although founded on two of the oldest sciences—hydrology and meteorology—says Mr. Hayes, flood forecasting is a comparatively new science. With the development of modern communication and the expansion of river and flood service, it has become an exact science. Actual high crests of rising rivers, Hayes says, usually vary but little from those predicted by them. For example, the Potomac at Washington missed only by 6 inches and 1 hour the 19-foot crest forecast on March 18 for 6 p. m. March 18. Meteorologists of the Weather Bureau compute these river stages by a mathematical formula in which the known quantities are height of the stream further up its course, precipitation along the banks and in the watersheds above and the river's past performance.

Sistie and Buzzie to Miss Easter Egg-Rolling Fete

Dall Children Will Be Absent From Washington Because of School Attendance; Mrs. Roosevelt to View President's Private Marine Exhibition.

By Vylla Poe Wilson.

Shouts of childish joy re-echoed through the White House yesterday when Sistie and Buzzie, grandchildren of President and Mrs. Roosevelt, were told they were to go by airplane with Mrs. Roosevelt to Norfolk, Va., this afternoon. Mrs. Roosevelt said at her press conference yesterday her grand children are air-minded and have flown before.

Sistie and Buzzie will be in attendance on Mrs. Roosevelt when she christens the new United States Navy aircraft carrier Yorktown at Newport News tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock. Mrs. Roosevelt will be the guest of honor at a luncheon after the launching and will fly back to Washington tomorrow afternoon, bringing the children with her.

The airplane trip to the launching in some ways will comfort Sistie and Buzzie in their disappointment at not being able to be at the White House for the annual Easter Monday egg rolling in the White House grounds by the children of Washington. Their school opens in New York on Monday and they must return.

"It takes the strength of young people to bring up children. As you get older the apprehension of experience grows on you, and fear is very bad for children," said Mrs. Roosevelt, as she laughingly acknowledged the care of two healthy young children is a strenuous task. Their mother, Mrs. John Boettiger, daughter of President and Mrs. Roosevelt, did not come to Washington with them.

Will Visit Project.

While Mrs. Roosevelt is in Norfolk, she told her press conference, she expects to visit the Swanton Government housing project, and the Aberdeen colored resettlement project.

Yesterday afternoon, after the luncheon at the White House in honor of Senhora de Vargas, wife of the President of Brazil, Mrs. Roosevelt attended the style show at the Woman's City Club.

Last night Miss Marian Dickerman and 16 members of the post-graduate class of Todhunter School, New York, were guests of Mrs. Roosevelt at dinner. She will entertain at a buffet luncheon for the Todhunter group today before going to the Anacostia Naval Air Station to take an airplane for Norfolk.

Mrs. Roosevelt expects to be back in Washington in time to attend the private view of the exhibition of President Roosevelt's collection of marine paintings, prints, etchings and ship models at the Corcoran Gallery tomorrow afternoon. She also expects to be in time to greet the economics department of Cornell University, who is motoring from Asheville, N. C., with a party of friends.

Speech Scheduled.

On Monday Mrs. Roosevelt will go to Morgantown, W. Va., to speak at the forum of the University of West Virginia. She will also go to Arthurville, W. Va., to inspect the Government homestead project there. She will hold her press conference at the White House Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock.

Mrs. Roosevelt has sent back the blue hat, with the veil hanging over the brim, which she first selected to wear with her new Easter suit. Instead, she will wear on Easter Sunday a hat of olive straw with a rather high crown, a medium brim, and a smart, small bouquet of flowers on it.

Questioned on the disappearance of the long brocade sofa in the green room, Mrs. Roosevelt explained it has been sent to be copied for a similar sofa for the red room.

Jack, one of the White House Irish setters, invaded Mrs. Roosevelt's press conference yesterday and insisted on being petted. He was contented when he put his head in Mrs. Roosevelt's lap and she rubbed him back of the ears. Jack is extremely good natured and very friendly. Jill, the other White House setter, preferred to romp on the White House portico with Sistie and Buzzie.

C. F. Brewster Visits Parents

Son of Representative Has Maurice Tillier, Stanley Williams as Guests.

Mr. Charles F. Brewster, who is here spending the Easter holiday with his parents, Representative and Mrs. Ralph O. Brewster, at the Carlton, has had as his guests for two days Mr. Maurice Tillier, of Little France, a member of the faculty of Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me., and Mr. Stanley Williams, of New York, a classmate there, who left for New York last night.

Monday his roommate, Mr. William S. Burton, son of Mr. Harold H. Burton, recently elected Mayor of Cleveland; Mr. Harry Schofield, of Skowhegan, Me.; and Mr. Edward Scribner, of Cleveland, will stop here for a brief visit on their way back to Bowdoin after a vacation in Cleveland.

Mr. Burton and Mr. Brewster are both members of the Delta Kappa Epsilon Fraternity to which their fathers, Representative Brewster and Mayor Burton, belonged years ago when they were roommates at the same college.

The Brewsters will leave by boat tonight to attend the christening of the Yorktown at Newport News tomorrow by Mrs. Roosevelt, and will return Sunday by way of Virginia Beach, taking the boat from Norfolk.

Mrs. D. H. Pickering To Be Guests at Tea

Mrs. D. H. Pickering, of Lowell, Mass., will be the guest of honor tomorrow at the regular Saturday afternoon tea held at Kenmore, Fredericksburg, Va. Mrs. George Hamilton Scott will pour and Miss Ellen Knox will receive.

The daffodils, jonquils and flowering shrubs in the Kenmore yard are in full bloom now, the soft spring colors making the setting for the old house.

Dr. and Mrs. Howard A. Ball, of San Diego, Calif., were guests of Dr. and Mrs. Charles H. Wolohan at their home in Takoma Park for a few days. Mrs. Ball, who before her marriage was Miss Elizabeth Evans, is the daughter of Dr. Newton Evans, vice president of the College of Medical Evangelists in Los Angeles and Loma Linda, Calif.

Notables Hear Philadelphia Symphony Here

By Dudley Harmon.

Leopold Stokowski's first and last appearance in Washington this season with the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra drew a large and distinguished audience to Constitution Hall last night. As invariably the case when Stokowski conducts, the house was full, with the exception of a few boxes.

Mrs. Mabel Boardman, a familiar figure at Capital concerts, occupied a box with several guests. Next to her sat Mme. Salto, wife of the Japanese Ambassador, with several from the Japanese Embassy.

Among those who applauded the selections from Wagner's "Parsifal," which composed the first half of the program, and the Russian music of Shostakovich and Rimsky-Korsakov, which came after the intermission, were the Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, the Undersecretary of State and Mrs. William Phillips, with their son, Christopher, who is home from Avon School in Connecticut for the holidays; Justice and Mrs. Owen J. Roberts, with their tall daughter, Miss Elizabeth Roberts, talented young artist, one of whose paintings was chosen by the jury committee yesterday to hang in the exhibition being sponsored by the District Federation of Women's Clubs at the National Museum; the retiring Secretary of the Spanish Embassy, Mr. Ramon Padilla, with his newly arrived successor, Don Jose Gonzalez, and Mrs. Tracy Dowd.

Others there were the Second Secretary of the Polish Embassy, Mr. Edward Kulikowski, with the Attache of the Embassy, Mr. Michal Budny; Mrs. Floyd Blair, who is visiting her mother, Mrs. Lee Warren; Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Wyckoff, Mrs. Merle Thorpe, Miss Elsie Ekengren, accompanied by Mr. Isaac Stokes; Mr. Michael Ross and his fiancée, Miss Camille Miller, who are to be married April 18; Mrs. Mondell Gregg, Mrs. Buchanan Meriman, Mr. and Mrs. Jouett Shouse, Miss Moira Archibald, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Goodwin, Mrs. W. W. Calbraith, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Burling, Miss Anne Carter Greene, the Misses Ruth and Dorothea Sowers.

After the performance, Stokowski returned to the stage, and while the audience listened breathlessly, said that he foresaw a new era for American music, and that he was going to retire from conducting in order to do research work. However, he promised that he would make at least one appearance in Washington next year as guest conductor with the symphony. A moving silence, followed by a long burst of applause, greeted his words.

After the concert, a downpour of rain kept most of the audience waiting on the steps for their cars or for taxis. License numbers were called in vain, taxi-men honked aggressively and the rain came down with ever-increasing force. As the writer splashed through the puddles in the street, a man leaned out of his taxi and called, "Can I give anybody a lift?" Before the writer could leap off the curb into the cab, four other people got there first, leaving her on the sidewalk with the bitter realization that she had missed the chance of a life-time, and that the man who offered the lift was Stokowski.

Mr. and Mrs. William J. Lappe, with their daughter and son, Miss Joan Lappe and Mr. William Lappe, jr., of Pittsburgh, are stopping at the Shoreham, and expect to remain in Washington until Sunday.

WOMEN'S SHOP—1207 F

SUBSTITUTE SWEETHEART

By Priscilla Wayne

Ruth Dayton, 18, orphaned, pretty, department store clerk, has been hired by Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Bradley, of Denver, to impersonate their niece, June Bradley, whom she greatly resembles. She is on her way to Chicago with them to the bedside of June's step-brother, Tom Bradley, who has been fatally injured in an automobile accident. The Bradleys have explained to her that June is ill and quarantined—that her impersonation is to bring comfort to a dying man.

CHAPTER II

Below, hundreds of feet, June could see the airport. The pilot circled the field waiting for the signal to settle the great ship down to the runway.

"Someone will meet us. But don't be afraid. Hold your head up," Mrs. Bradley instructed Ruth, "act exactly as if you knew what everything is about."

"Don't let it cramp my style, huh?" Ruth laughed. As well as she could about this thing as-ry. She had entered it with her eyes open. No one forced her.

It was reassuring, though, to feel the crinkle of that small oblong of paper she had hidden away in the front of her blouse. It had come from her brother, Jerry, that morning, just before she left the apartment she shared with two other girls; to meet the Bradleys and take off on the big adventure.

All for Jerry

Jerry was Ruth's brother, 20, working his way through medical college at the State University of Iowa. Thoughts of Jerry had made that $500 a week offered by Joseph Bradley assume the most enticing proposition to Ruth.

There were many things Ruth needed for herself, but she could get along. The thought of Jerry and what that $500 would mean to him had been the actual factor in causing Ruth to accept the queer proposition of the Bradleys. Five hundred dollars a week—and perhaps the work would last several weeks. If it did that might even mean that she could quit her work, go and keep house for Jerry, perhaps even take the music course she longed for. She had had Jerry, long distance, late the night before, told him as guardedly as she could what the offer was and found, much to her surprise and amazement, that Jerry was very much opposed to her accepting the offer.

"Obey Me"

"Don't you dare," he warned her. "Ruth, promise me. Why, you don't know what these people are. Credentials? Huh, their credentials are taken probably. Sounds like a pair of crooks. Don't you dare go. Promise me."

And Ruth had almost promised. This morning the telegram, Ruth smiled now, remembering it. It said: "Give up this wild plan. Let me hear from you at once. I am older than you are. Don't let me down. It is the great ship settled slowly down to the runway. Ruth buttoned the handsome squirrel coat about her and as she did so felt again the reassuring crinkle of that telegram. Joseph Bradley touched her arm reassuringly as she stepped down from the plane. "Jim's chauffeur is here. They knew we were coming. I wired."

Act as though you remembered him. His name is Tom. And don't be worried. He's not suspicious. Ruth did not like the word. Somehow the adventure did not seem quite so thrilling just now.

They came into the great airport building which is part hangar, part waiting room, part offices. At the door a tall, uniformed man waited. He took Mr. Bradley's bags and spoke to all of them.

"Miss June"

His "Good morning, Miss June," set Ruth's heart soaring. Well, she had passed the first test with flying colors. Certainly. She had even managed to say, "Good morning, Tom."

Mr. Bradley leaned forward to talk to Tom. "How is Jim this morning?" The nurse says she thinks he's a little better."

"Oh, that's good," Mrs. Bradley gushed. "We've been so worried. It's true that he can't see at all. Tom's blind. He's been blind since the accident. Tom seemed to think a minute before he answered and the three in the back seat fairly stopped breathing."

Miracle

"Nobody knows. Not even the doctors. It seems as though the accident had seemed an endless eternity. His head was badly cut by shattered glass and there is some talk that the optic nerve is injured. I'm a nurse. I guess no one knows. It's a miracle that he's alive. He's pretty badly hurt, then?"

"Oh, yes, sir. They say it will be weeks before he's well again. Then he may recover."

Then he may recover. It seemed to Ruth that Mr. Bradley's voice fell a little flat. Could he be disappointed at learning his nephew might recover?

"He never was in any danger of his life, I think, sir. They all seem pretty optimistic about his sight, too."

Mrs. Bradley voiced another question. "Is he at home? We thought, from the telegrams, that they'd taken him to the hospital."

Wouldn't Stay

"They did. At first. But he wanted to be brought home. He wouldn't stay at the hospital."

"Oh," Mrs. Bradley made no other comment, but, to Ruth's sensitive ears that one word was enough. They had believed him to be at the hospital. His being there would make their deception very easy. At the hospital they would be permitted to see him only for a very few minutes at a time. The situation certainly was complicated by having the injured man at home.

To her utter amazement Ruth found herself asking a question. Her voice seemed odd, unrecognizable even to herself. "Is he conscious?"

The minute she had asked the question Ruth regretted it. She did not dare even glance toward either of her companions, but she felt their indignation and their resentment at her entrance into the conversation. The very air was tense with it.

"Oh, yes, Miss," Tom said. "I guess he was conscious even right after it happened. He never did lose consciousness. Why, he insists he's going to get up and get dressed in a few days."

"No, he doesn't? Why, he simply can't," Mrs. Bradley's voice was high, tense, excited.

Childish Rages, Head-Bangings Just Tantrums

Mothers Should Ignore Outbursts, and Then Youngsters Will Stop.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

MOLLY was only 2 years old and making experiments in getting her own way. She had found out that screaming and kicking got her nowhere, because her mother simply put her into another room until the storm was over.

So one day when things did not please her, she pounded her head on the floor, partly to make herself cry louder and partly to shock her mother.

Of course, she was too little to reason the matter out, but the results were the same, and the ruse succeeded, for the mother, instead of taking Molly's behavior with unconcern, grew excited and surrendered to the child's demands.

There are a great many children who will deliberately hurt themselves to attract attention. For a 2-year-old child to pound its head on the floor is not unusual, though the mother, seeing what seems to her such unnatural behavior, is generally shocked at least the first time. She is apt to suspect that the child is unbalanced or in some way "queer," and may even hurry to a psychiatrist for help.

She should pay no more attention to this expression of the child's temper than she did to his kicks and screams.

What the child wants and is seeking is attention, and if he finds that pounding his own head will get it where mere noise will not, he will pound his head. If, on the other hand, he sees that his mother is different to all expressions of rage, however extreme and alarming, he will in time give up tantrums altogether, since they are not worth the trouble.

Christmas?

Mrs. Bradley gave the girl a quick look over her knee. But Ruth had not forgotten. She had been well drilled in her little part. "Almost five years ago, about Christmas time when I went to St. Valentine's Day," the chauffeur shot the words into the conversation suddenly. "Don't you remember?" I took you to the airport myself."

"Yes, yes, I do remember," Ruth faltered, feeling herself suddenly trapped.

Mrs. Bradley covered the awkward silence. "The time is relatively unimportant, after all. The point is that you're here now and it's good to be home."

The word "home" went through a district of lovely homes; great handsome mansions, very imposing, very impressive. Tom drove into the driveway of one of the largest of them.

Ruth's heart beat wildly. She could scarcely catch her breath as they went up the imposing stone steps. Standing in a great hall, she made out a man in a dark suit. Should she walk right away now? Should she tell these people she couldn't go on with their plan?

Ruth is determined. Nonsense. A calmer self was answering. Why should she back out now? The man worked. If it gave any comfort to the sick man, then that was fine. If it didn't, well, at least, it wasn't criminal. But the frightened, fluttery self kept nagging at her. What if it is a trap? What if they're kidnapping you?

That fear went tumbling instantly. Why should they kidnap her? She was a girl, not a man. Kidnaped wealthy girls, didn't they? Girls whose folks could pay a ransom? Well? Who could pay a ransom for Ruth Dayton? Certainly not Jerry.

Too late. But it was too late now to step out of the plan. They were inside the house. The man worked. If it gave any comfort to the sick man, then that was fine. If it didn't, well, at least, it wasn't criminal. But the frightened, fluttery self kept nagging at her. What if it is a trap? What if they're kidnapping you?

Too late. But it was too late now to step out of the plan. They were inside the house. The man worked. If it gave any comfort to the sick man, then that was fine. If it didn't, well, at least, it wasn't criminal. But the frightened, fluttery self kept nagging at her. What if it is a trap? What if they're kidnapping you?

That fear went tumbling instantly. Why should they kidnap her? She was a girl, not a man. Kidnaped wealthy girls, didn't they? Girls whose folks could pay a ransom? Well? Who could pay a ransom for Ruth Dayton? Certainly not Jerry.

Woman's Chances Best Now, Says Dr. Gallagher

Noted Educator, Here for Conference of University Women, Finds Today's Opportunities Greater Than Previous Eras.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

MANY A WOMAN, FANCY A-FLIGHT, has thumbed through the pages of history and regretted she did not live back in the days when femininity had a fling. Say in the era when a lone woman, Elizabeth, successfully ruled England; or in the fifteenth century when Joan of Arc led an army of men into battle; or back in 600 B. C., the time of Sappho, when women poets were even more widely read than men.

But Dr. Katherine Gallagher, professor of history at Goucher College and Johns Hopkins University College for Teachers, who knows more than most persons about the chances women had in the past, is of a different opinion.

Here to attend the recent South Atlantic Conference of the American Association of University Women, she talked—as chairman of fellowship awards for the A. A. U. W.—on the meaning of fellowship. Later, in an exclusive interview, she talked of woman's chance in a changing world and stressed, "If I had my choice of living in any country in any era, I'd certainly choose America, 1936."

Modern Age Thrilling.

She believes that from a woman's point of view, the modern age is particularly thrilling. "This is the first time we have ever had a chance to be represented in all spheres of activity," she said. "It is the first time the world has awakened to the fact woman's interests can expand beyond 'woman's only business' (rearing a family and keeping house), and it is also the first time people have ever recognized women have a peculiar contribution to make to both scholarly and economic activity."

This is the only era in which man's superiority to woman ever has been questioned, Dr. Gallagher further pointed out. "Today, as never before, the world realizes that brawn and brain do not necessarily go together; that physical strength, so essential in pioneer days, is of less importance than it used to be; that women deserve an equal chance with men to prove their ability."

If she had to choose some past era in which to live, however, Dr. Gallagher said there were only two she would consider. "A woman had a fair chance back in the days of the Roman empire, toward its end," she explained. "For the first time since the world began, women were getting somewhere in competition with men. They were coming out into public life (were even running for office). They were gaining some legal standing. Furthermore, they were beginning to be talked about," she continued, smiling, "which means men were leaving 'off' taking them for granted."

Would Choose Renaissance.

But the era she would choose above all is her favorite period of history, the Italian Renaissance. Women of that time were not only talked about but were "considered interesting," she said, her eyes twinkling. "That proved they had made considerable progress."

She mentioned, also, "The revival of interest in classical beauty in the Renaissance. It was a time when women were doing some creative work, particularly in literature. Then, as always, there were a good many feminine poets—like Sappho, who lived in the sixth century B. C., and Veronica Franka, who lived in the first century B. C. and wrote verse in another form besides the sonnet (her's were in terza rima)."

"All in all, a woman in those days had a pretty good thing of it." But she wasn't nearly so fortunate as the woman living today, Dr. Gallagher emphasized. "Now, as before, a woman can cut her life largely according to the pattern of her own desires. If she wants a career, she can have it. If she wants a husband, she can get it. If she wants a home, she can usually have that, too. Often, the modern woman has all three. But when a woman of the past had either a career or an enviable education, she was an exception to the rule. When she had both, plus a home and children, she was a wonder."

Women of Preeminence.

She explained further Italian Renaissance women were going places in public life; that there were 12 women doctors in the same guild as Dante; and that there were a few women who were doing some creative work, particularly in literature. Then, as always, there were a good many feminine poets—like Sappho, who lived in the sixth century B. C., and Veronica Franka, who lived in the first century B. C. and wrote verse in another form besides the sonnet (her's were in terza rima)."

Ancient Herb Recipes Useful Still in Spring

Cathedral Close Garden Reminder of Plants' Value in Cooking.

By Elizabeth E. Poe.

A REAL SIGN of spring in Washington is to be found in the cluster of living herb plants in the Cottage Herb Garden of All Hallows Guild, close by the Norman Gate of the Bishop's Garden in Washington Cathedral Close. The gay little plants promise their largesse of flavor and fragrance for Washington housewives. Many a nifty housewife is to be seen in the Close just now with little Red Riding Hood baskets laden down with herb plants.

The fields and meadows around Washington also have contributions to make to the housewife's spring basket of good things. "Take the chickweed, for instance. This herb grows wild in all the habitable parts of the world. Once it was used as a pot-herb. Rich in salts of potash, it will be used as an ingredient in vegetable soups, according to several experts. It is made of it by pouring one quart of boiling water on two large handfuls of the plant."

Poets have sung of cowslips. Including Shakespeare himself. In mankind has forgotten many of its uses since that age. The housewives of the great bard's time used the young leaves and flowers in salads, pot-herbs and their larders displayed cowslip creams, puddings, tarts and wines. Patrick Lamb, head cook to Charles II, James II, William and Mary and Queen Anne, according to Miss Eleanor Sinclair Rodhe in "A Garden of Herbs," made a cowslip tart, after the following manner:

Cowslip Tart.

Take the blossoms of cowslips, mince them, exceedingly small, and best done in a mortar; put to them a handful or two of grated Naples biskuit, and about a pint and a half of cream, boil them a little over the fire, then take them off, and beat the cream with eight eggs with a little cream; if it does not thicken, put it over again till it does; take heed that it does not curdle. Season it with sugar, rosewater and lemon juice. It is best to let your cream be cold before you stir in the eggs."

In former times daisy leaves were included in ingredients for salads and daisy roots are still eaten by the Spanish and Italian peasants. "Another humble denizen of spring fields is the dandelion, making a brave show with its yellow blossoms. In the South and this section of the country it is known as the 'pignolia' or 'pignolia'."

In other years, the leaves were used for salad, too, and there are many who sing its attributes when rendered into the form of dandelion wine. "The dandelion," says "Travels Around Our Village," gives the following recipe for Dandelion Wine.

To make 9 gallons of wine, boil 27 quarts of pips in 9 gallons of water for an hour. Strain and boil again with 13½ pounds best Demerara sugar, 1 ounce of hops, ¼ pound brown ginger and sufficient orange and lemon peel to taste. Stir in 18 lemons, orange and 12 lemons, and put to them 13½ pounds of sugar as above. Pour over them, and boiling beyond when blood warm, add a little brewer's yeast. Strain again before putting into a barrel. The wine should be permitted to work three or four days before being bunged tight. Bottle in six months.

Food Poisoning.

We cannot always determine from taste or odor whether food is wholesome, although the stomach is a rather keen detective and will reject in most instances unwanted or unfit food. Occasionally, however, infected food may pass the stomach barrier and enter the intestine before its true character is discovered.

How does food spoil? Harmful organisms can become mixed with perfectly clean food in the course of its preparation, from such sources as unclean hands and utensils. Vermin often bring about contamination before the food is served. With the coming of spring the natural temperature of the outdoors, which in many cases has been used for purposes of refrigeration, rises to a point where bacteria will reproduce readily. If the food originally contains putrefactive organisms which have not been killed by cooking, growth will begin, and as a result, the material will be deleterious when used for human consumption.

Is summer the only season in which food poisoning can develop? Obviously, the answer is "no." Although there is a greater tendency to food spoilage during the warm months of the year, in a recent epidemic in 18 Ohio city, 40 individuals were affected, 14 of whom were so ill that rather extensive hospital care was required. The source of the infection was traced to cream cake and cream pie.

The symptoms appeared within from 5 to 24 hours. Abdominal cramps were first noted, which increased gradually in intensity and the patients became exceedingly weak. Nausea, vomiting and diarrhea followed in sequence. Some of the patients exhibited very high temperatures, particularly the children. Cultures of the intestinal contents disclosed organisms of the salmonella or paratyphoid groups. The most striking symptom was the marked loss of water, which was replaced as rapidly as possible by the injection of fluid under the skin in severe cases, directly into a vein. All food was stopped for the time being although glucose was administered to a few of the victims.

With the disappearance of the symptom of vomiting, and as soon as the water balance had been restored, toast and thin gruel were fed in small amounts. The Morrell Heister scraped apple diet was also used successfully. This consists in feeding all of the scraped apple that the patient desires.

Epidemics of this character are all too frequently mislabeled ptomaine poisoning. While ptomaines do exist, they are rare as a cause of poisoning. Presumably they are formed in food before it is eaten, and our senses of smell and taste would reject ptomaine loaded food. It is far too nasty to eat. Furthermore, it has been found that ptomaines taken into the intestinal tract are not really very noxious; if they should be injected directly into the circulation, however, they would bring on serious symptoms. We can virtually dismiss ptomaines as a source of food poisoning.

Nine Pictures Get Under Way In One Studio

Production Peak Reached by Warner Brothers on Summer Product.

On the first day of April nine productions were before the cameras at the Warner Bros.-First National studios in Hollywood.

Some of the most popular players in pictures are hard at work in these pictures, which will reach Washington this summer and fall for unrelenting at the Earle and Metropolitan theaters.

Kay Francis, in the plain lines of a nurse's costume, is bringing to life the story of "Florence Nightingale." Ian Hunter, Donald Woods, Nigel Bruce, Lillian Cooper and Halliwell Hobbes are prominent in her supporting cast, which is made up largely of English players.

Joe E. Brown is contributing the famous Brown mouth and mannerisms to "Earthworm Tractors," filmization of the Saturday Evening Post story by William Halliday Upson. Guy Kibbee, June Travis and Dick Foran are among those appearing with him.

Robinson Turns G-Man.

Edward G. Robinson has returned to the type of exciting characterization that made him famous in "Bullets and Ballots." The Marlon Moore story which William R. (Rob) Keighly is directing, Joan Blondell plays the feminine lead and Humphrey Bogart, Barton MacLane, George E. Stone and Frank McHugh are others in the cast.

Warren Williams has started an exciting mystery drama about Perry Mason, the lawyer-detective, in "The Cat and the Hat." Claire Dodd, Allen Jenkins, Wini Shaw and Paul Stone are members of the supporting cast.

Pat O'Brien, having just completed his first role in "I Married a Doctor," steps into another dramatic production, "Public Enemy's Wife." Margaret Lindsay appears opposite him in this new feature.

When Love Begins.

"Love Begins At 20," with Warren Hull and Patricia Ellis, and "The Millions in It," featuring Ross Alexander and Beverly Roberts, are two new comedies on the list. Ace comedian Hugh Herbert enlivens the first, while another stellar humorist, September, has been assigned to the second. "Stage Struck," the new Warner musical, starring Dick Powell, is the most recent of the productions to get under way. A stellar cast has been lined up to support the popular singing star.

Perhaps the most sweeping drama of the year, "The Charge of the Light Brigade," rounds out the list of nine features now before cameras. Errol Flynn heads the cast of this mammoth production, which is now "on location" with hundreds of extras.

Columbianians

"Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model," the Columbia Players present the melodrama, directed by Robert M. Miller and starring Robert M. Miller and Patricia Ellis. Stage settings designed by Jane Lauster Rubeys. At Pierce Hall April 1, 2 and 3. Rehearsal Wednesday at W. A. White.

The Columbia Players, on whose shining escutcheon is emblazoned the record of many a notable production, turned back the pages of dramatic history last evening to offer Owen Davis' melodrama of "Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model." But in so doing seemed to forget the accepted fact of the present in this day of so-called grace of dramatic form long since passed from the theatrical scene.

Had the Players added genuine burlesque to their palpal over-acting, the production might easily have scaled those heights achieved by "Murder in the Red Barn," "The Drunkard," "East Lynne" and "Oscar Wilde." As it was, last evening's reading was almost straight, with no seeming effort to wrest from the lines that degree of travesty which has earliest been the same type of production so hilarious.

Of the entire roster, two stand out as particularly effective—A. E. Dubber, Jr., and Orson Holland. Mr. Dubber, as the young electrician and hero, read his part with a New Sparkian matter of factness, with little expression and running delightfully over a punctuation. Mr. Holland, as Nellie's besotted uncle, gave a genuine reading of villainy which belied the announcement that he had been in the role only since Sunday, when an accident forced H. R. Bankage out of the company.

Large Cast Employed.

Margery Rice was seen in the title role, with Walter Buehler and Bertha Cunningham—two, with Mr. Holland—adding the aristocratic obstacles to the heroine's restoration of Nellie to her mother, played by Dorothy M. (Till) White and her one and only, Mr. Dubber. Others in the company included Robert M. Miller, Selma Klein, Oliver Anderson, Betty Leaf, Betty Clark, Juliet Edles Alves, Esther Beale, Jean Beardsley, B. A. P. Doehrer, George Edwards and Edgar Kloten.

Mention should be made of the "specialties"—"She's a Bird in a Gilded Cage," by Juliet Edles Alves and Joe Bourne; "A Passing Policeman," by George Edwards; "Won't You Splash Me," by Edgar Kloten and Betty Leaf; and "In a Man-of-Aching Hearts," by Selma Klein. Jane Lauster Rubeys' unit setting was good, although through 13 scenes an inevitable similarity was sometimes evident.

Coronation of Edward Planned for May, 1937

London, April 2 (AP).—Prime Minister Baldwin announced to the House of Commons today that King Edward will be crowned in May, 1937. He said the exact date for the coronation ceremonies would be announced later.

About The Showshops

AS this is written late Thursday afternoon, I have just come from a private preview screening, backstage at Loew's Fox, of "It Happened in Washington," the short-reel subject sponsored by Loew's Inc. and The Washington Post and to be shown as an extra added attraction in conjunction with Laurel and Hardy in "The Bohemian Girl," at Loew's Palace Theater, beginning today.

It is pleasant to be able to say that this locally made playlet exceeds all expectations in the capability of its acting, the clarity of its sound reproduction and the skill with which an interesting story of scholastic life has been told in two reels of celluloid with a total running time of slightly less than 20 minutes. Senator Ashurst, as the school prexy; Dorothy Ramsdell, as the heroine, and James Fendergrast, the hero, all acquit themselves with credit, as do those entrusted with speaking parts in their support. The stuttering lad who supplies the "comedy relief" has an excellent notion of comic values and timing.

Not because it was partially sponsored by this paper, but because it reflects the successful culmination of a great deal of conscientious effort, this subject is worthy of its place on the Palace bill and will afford those concerned in its making, as well as their families and friends, a quarter-hour or so of fine exhilaration.

It will be of interest to the many Washington high school students appearing in the cast and ensemble of "It Happened in Washington" to know that Ann Loring, who appears in the leading feminine role opposite Warner Baxter in "The Robin Hood of El Dorado," opening today as chief screen feature at Loew's Fox, received her chance on the professional screen in precisely the same manner. Miss Loring, whose real name is Ann Kurina, was chosen as likely material for the "big-time" cinema after one of these amateur screen tests conducted by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. So proficient did she prove that she makes her screen debut as a leading woman. "The Robin Hood of El Dorado" is her first picture. "Someone in the cast of 'It Happened in Washington' may receive similar recognition. Stranger things have happened—especially in the motion picture industry.

RAYMOND MASSEY, one of the foremost of contemporary English actors, who plays the leading role in the Gaumont British film production of "Things to Come," adapted from H. G. Wells' story of "The Shape of Things to Come," will arrive in the Capital on Monday to meet the Washington drama desks and possibly attend the Tuesday night international preview of the picture at the Wardman Park Theater. Mr. Massey will fly here from New York in company with Morris Hauer, Eastern chief of United Artists publicity, arriving here in the neighborhood of 1 o'clock. Shortly thereafter he will be honor guest at a cocktail party for the press in the Carlton Hotel. At 5 the same afternoon, Mr. Massey will be guest of Sir Ronald and Lady Lindsay at the British Embassy.

Mr. Massey enjoys a peculiar reputation in the theater. Although he has made most of his professional appearances on the other side, he is looked upon in London as an American actor, and in the United States as a British star.

Had it not been for the Great War, it is possible that Raymond Massey never would have become an actor. After trying a number of other occupations after his discharge from the Canadian forces, he took up the stage and made his debut at Everyman's Theater in 1922 in the role of Jack in Eugene O'Neill's play of "In the Zone." Many London engagements followed and in 1922, ten years after his stage debut, Mr. Massey found it feasible to visit Hollywood, where he played a prominent role in "The Old Dark House." His latest screen appearance, of course, is as John Cabel in the Wells clairvoyant super-production of "Things to Come."

To clarify this America-England controversy as to the Massey nationality, it should be noted that the Massey family settled in New England in 1830, almost the wake of the Mayflower. Settled there for nearly two centuries, they moved to Toronto, Ontario, where Raymond Massey was born on August 30, 1895, thus making him a fellow-townsman of that other "British" star, Beatrice Lillie, here last week in "At Home Abroad."

One suspects that the pay social whirl planned by the Loew executives, with "Things to Come" as an excuse, will not end with the afternoon levee in honor of Mr. Massey on Monday. Already one hears rumors of a dinner party at Wardman preceding the preview of the picture on Tuesday evening. Having learned from many happy past experiences what to expect when the Loew interests throw a party, this is an occasion to be anticipated with the keenest eagerness—especially since Mr. and Mrs. Carter Barron return from their three weeks in Florida on Sunday and will be among those present.

RECENT caller at this desk was that genial foreign film impresario, Matty Radin, who is the directing genius of the chain of theaters of which the Belasco in this city forms an important link. While Mr. Radin's call was a purely "chit-chat" sort of business, with Manager Jack Thomas of the Belasco tugging at his elbow, he nevertheless let drop a few hints of things that are to come on Lafayette Square.

Matty, it seems, has been considerably impressed by the success that has been enjoyed by the famous old films—not too old, of course—that have been revived of recent weeks at the Belasco. There is going to be a bit of this sort of thing—going farther back toward the beginning of "big" films than anyone else has had the courage to venture. While it is not at liberty at this time to divulge plans that were told me in confidence, details will come later, since I have been invited to "sit in" on the private screenings of some of these survivors of a past era to help determine whether or not they might do for current consumption.

Incidentally, Matty Radin is an ardent 1936 booster for Franklin D. Roosevelt. Being a bit of a pay-and-link artist and a member in a spare time, he furnishes the Democratic National Committee with frequent cartoons and jingles for campaign use. In fact, he had just come from there when he dropped by to see me.

This seems to be a day of agreeable duties. It is a pleasure to make known that Bess Davis Schreiner, author, publicist, theatrical director and producer, has been appointed subscription manager in Washington for the American Theater Society, with offices in the National Theater. We had some inkling that such an appointment might be in the wind and yesterday there arrived from Warren P. Munsell, business manager of the society and a high official of the Theater Guild, stating definitely that the appointment had been made. The appointment of Miss Schreiner to this important post became effective yesterday. Congratulations to both Mr. Munsell and Bess Schreiner, who knows her theater and is an inveterate purveyor of "copy" that is fit to print.

Well, now that you have seen this palpitating palladium in its new form, how do you like it?

While the Camera Isn't Looking.

HOLLYWOOD, April 1. JEAN HARLOW: She walks from the set to her dressing room and shouts a loud hello to those she meets on the way.

She will often wander into the publicity office to meet "the boys" personally. She re-enters an author's lines on the screen about the same as she speaks her own lines in a gathering. She can toss a pair of dice at the Clover Club better than any woman I have seen.

Hugh Herbert: He never appears as if in make-up. The costume he wears in a flicker is the clothes he wears on the street. He never memorizes his role, because he always forgets it. He ad libs some funny lines on the set which authors receive credit for having written. He is always inviting friends to his ranch in the valley. He has a goldfish pool, large enough for three people to go swimming in, in the center of his living room.

Johnny Weissmuller: He runs about the set, when making "Tarzan," in his bare feet. He drives his car home from work in his bare feet. After swimming in the Metro tank for a scene, he always rushes to his dressing room to take a shower. After you marvel at his swimming he feels kindly toward you and offers to give you swimming lessons. The best performance he ever gave was at the Trocadero several weeks ago. He sat at a table, and they were so quiet no one knew they were in the place.

Dick Powell: He actually makes the play of the screen. He tries to please. He will pose for pictures with any visitors who tour the studio. When in a small town, he will drop in to chat with the local theater exhibitor. He realizes they are the people who buy his pictures. He is puzzled because two movie critics, in particular, are always picking on him. "They part me when I'm in pictures," he says. "I'm not even in." He would like to meet them personally.

Alice Faye: She doesn't behave like a movie star; that is, she doesn't try to "put it on." Since the shade of her hair has become more sedate, she has temporarily deserted the dance floor for the boules. She will tell you that working with Shirley Temple had a good influence on her. When she goes to the movies she holds hands with the current boy friend, even while watching Alice Faye on the screen.

Warner Baxter: He is rather quiet on the set. His standing, who can pass for his double, and often does, frequently gains more attention. He has a palatial suite of rooms, which resembles a Park avenue apartment for a dressing room. He seldom goes to the night clubs and is not one of Hollywood's Trocadero actors. He gets about, though. He takes pride in the house he built and furnished. Recently, he had a rug dyed four times to get it the correct shade of pink.

Rochelle Hudson: A young girl, who is tired of playing ingenues. Especially "goody-goody" ingenues—which, come to think of it, are the only type of this breed. She generally speaks the truth in interviews—and also to actors. She was amazed to learn that she was in love with Harry Richman. She said: "I had to be told by a director when to kiss him." She doesn't go out stepping off. The trouble with most of my boy friends is that when they come to take me out they want to stay in the parlor and sit on the sofa.

Charlie Chaplin: He has a grand prop smile, which he slips on and off. Although a holdout for

Al Jolson Discovers a Beauty

This would be a young charmer by the name of Colleen Coleman, whose beauty, combined with her ability as an actress, has resulted in her being signed to a long-term contract by the Warner Brothers Studios. She makes her screen debut in "The Singing Kid," the new starring vehicle for Al Jolson, in which Beverly Roberts, another newcomer, makes her debut as leading woman. Also in the new Jolson film, coming soon to the Earle, is that precocious youngster, Sybil Jason. With all of the old-timers in the cast added, this looks as if it might "have something."

silent flickers, he is a charming talker. His best friends are those who will listen to him talk. He favors the acquaintanceship of celebrities. He will let you know that he reads heavy books about world economics—but he also reads his press clippings. He takes notice of his notices.

Barbara Stanwyck: She's the kind of a lady the boys call a "regular fellow"—and she doesn't pose. Doesn't make an effort to be natural, and therefore she generally is. She is red-haired and can shout when necessary. She has a sense of humor. She knows the answers. Yesterday, I held her hand. She said: "Don't you feel a little bit like Robert Taylor now?"

'Tobacco Road' Ban Here Is Demanded

Demands that the play "Tobacco Road," the New York hit which is to open at the National Theater on Sunday night be barred from the local stage were turned over to police officials yesterday by Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen.

One demand was sent him anonymously on a postcard. An other bitter denunciation was voiced in a letter from a woman who said she was a native of Georgia. Capt. Rhoda Milliken, head of the woman's bureau of the police department, and probably a representative of the United States attorney's office will see the first performance of the play on Sunday night. Capt. Milliken or another member of the woman's bureau, reviews the opening performance of all plays presented in Washington. Their critical comments usually are confined to request for elimination of lines or modification of a scene.

67,000 Trout Flood Toll At State Fish Hatchery

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Bedford, Pa., April 2.—More than 67,000 brown trout, measuring about 2 inches each, were washed away from the ponds at the State Fish Hatchery at Reynoldsdale, Bedford County, during the St. Patrick's Day floods, a check-up has just revealed.

Many of the trout are being saved by a corps of sportsmen, who are collecting them from swamps below the hatchery and placing them back in the ponds, which overflowed two weeks ago.

43 Writers, Editors Favor St. Louis Team; 39 for Cubs

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 2.—The St. Louis Cardinals, nosed out by the Chicago Cubs' sensational stretch drive last fall, will be back at the top of the National League in September in the opinion of the majority of the 98 sports editors and baseball writers participating in the Associated Press tenth annual poll.

The battle of ballots between Frankie Frisch's rollicking crew and Charley Grimm's champions was close, with 43 of the experts favoring the Cardinals and 39 voting for the Cubs to repeat.

Backers of the "Gashouse gang" figured that Frisch had added strength to a team that already includes the pitching Deans by the addition to Leroy Farnelle, speed ball moundsman. In contrast the Cubs will take the field with virtually the same team that compiled 21 straight victories in the closing month of the 1935 campaign to clinch the flag in a blanket finish.

The league champions did not receive a vote below third place, but one expert thought the Cards would finish no better than fourth.

Monty Stratton, 22-year-old right-hander of the Chicago White Sox, Monty, who stretches 6-feet-5 skyward, won 17 and lost 9 for St. Paul, a second division American Association club, last season. He appears to have everything it takes, notably a very fast ball.

Joe Di Maggio, 21-year-old outfielder and slugger obtained from San Francisco by the New York Yankees, Joe has disclosed a left-field, but Yankee fans don't have to worry. Joe can really clown that horse hide. He has shown that during spring training and in the Pacific Coast League.

Lee Elbert Stine, right-handed pitcher obtained by Cincinnati from St. Paul, Lee promises to be another Wesley Ferrell. He can pitch and he can hit.

Eastern Five Conquers Brockton, 39-28, in N. Y. Tourney Tilt

Local Quint Takes First Game

D. C. Team Overcomes Bay Staters' Early Scoring Lead.

By John R. Vourburgh.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y., April 2.—Eastern High's white-clad wizards of basketball flitted before 2,000 wide-eyed spectators and through their dazzle-eyed rivals here tonight as they brushed Brockton High, of Massachusetts, out of the seventeenth annual Eastern States Scholastic Tournament by a score of 39 to 28.

After a rusty beginning the boys from the District settled down to a swift, silent passing-and-shooting game which blinded the Bay Staters and drew a prolonged series of "ohs" and "ahs" from the admiring throng. Thus the cagers from the Capital opened the defense of its championship with the most impressive performance of the first day's play of the tournament.

The rather shaky beginning of the Lincoln Parkers only made their magical manipulating in the later going more impressive. The Massachusetts boys, from the famous Boot and Shoe City, were booed out of the tournament most inconsiderately once Capt. Charles F. Hollige and colleagues settled down to their machine-like technique.

Trait Early in Game.
After seeing themselves spattered all over the front pages and sports pages of the local papers, the young men from East Capitol street, were possibly just a bit affected as they went on the floor, Brockton, winner of the recent M. I. T. intercollegiate tournament of its home State, proceeded to bring the champs down to earth, however.

A very able team in its own right, Brockton dashed to a 6-10 lead before the Lincoln Parkers found themselves. Capt. Hollige and Dope Dean then proceeded to put the Washington team back in the running and Eastern trailed only 11-10 at the end of the first quarter.

Buddy Shaner, the singing center, then took a hand in the scoring proceedings and came through with three neat shots at full tilt, all of which swished through as if guided. It was a basket by Red Scheille, however, which ranked Eastern to a 14-10 lead during the second quarter, pulling them from a 1-point deficit. They were never in danger of losing it from then on.

Eastern will meet Brown Prep, of Philadelphia, in the semifinals tomorrow at 8:15 p. m. The Pennsylvania prep school champions rallied in the last quarter to eliminate Massachusetts Military Academy, of Woodstock, Va., 38-28, after trailing until the last five minutes of play.

By Brown's eighteenth win in 19 states this season.

Boys Club Americans Win Basketball Title

The Boys Club Americans barely overcame the Bovello Middlets last night to take the basketball title in the 115-point class of the Boys Club League. It was the second straight victory they had scored over Bovello, the first being an 8-12 win 24-18 earlier in the evening.

Pop Boys Meet Tonight.
The Pop Boys baseball team, formerly known as the Nolan Motor Co. line, will hold an organization meeting tonight at 8 o'clock at the Blue Bell Cafe, 4300 Connecticut avenue northwest. Manager Kenny Randall requests all members of last year's Nolan team to be present.

Niagara Falls, Ontario, April 2 (P). The Buffalo Bisons drew into a tie with the Windsor Bulldogs in the semifinal round of the International Hockey League play-offs here tonight, winning the second of a three-game series, 1 to 0.

Chase, Nats' Rookie Ace, To Oppose Reds Today

Macon, Ga., April 2.—Kendall Chase, newest sensation among the Washington club's rookie pitching talent, will face the Cincinnati Reds tomorrow at Rome, Manager Bucky Harris announced tonight.

Chase, a comparatively small coarsen, has found new life in Harris' eyes as a result of his six-inning pitching against Louisville last week at a time when Harris was considering his release.

He curbed his wildness, his chief fault, and according to Coach Earl McNeely, who managed the Nats' second-string team in the game, possesses the fastest ball on the club with the exception of Buck Newsom.

Nats' New Catcher in Debut

WALTER MILLIES.

Millies Catches First Game For Nats

By a Staff Correspondent.

MACON, Ga., April 2.—Unshaven and unbrushed, but not unwarmed, Walter Millies, rookie catcher, reported to the Nats today and found himself in action behind the plate a few hours later. Manager Bucky Harris, eager to survey the talents of the 24-year-old lad purchased from Brooklyn, ordered him in today's game with the Reds in the last three innings and saw nothing to disturb his hopes that Millies was the answer to his catching prayers.

He didn't get a hit in his one time at bat, but he smacked the ball hard at Shortstop Thevenow to get the benefit of Thevenow's error and he did, indeed, display the confidence and hustle behind the plate that caused him to come recommended highly.

He's a dark-skinned, comparatively small but rugged fellow of 180 pounds who tells a human-interest story of his entrance into the American League.

Manager Casey Stengel, of the Dodgers, shipped Millies from the Brooklyn line-up after he learned the Washington club was bidding for him, Millies revealed. The Brooklyn club was bound to turn over to Indianapolis four of its cast-off ball players and Millies apparently was to be one of them, but Manager Bill Killefer, of Indianapolis, was taken in by Stengel's tactics.

When Killefer attended the Dodgers' games at Clearwater Stengel not only kept Millies out of the line-up, but out of uniform, and Killefer, who was keen after a catcher, failed to note his presence with the team.

G. W. Nine Plays Vermont U. Today

George Washington's budding big-leaguers will tie themselves to the East Ellipse this afternoon in search of their second straight baseball victory when they meet up with Vermont at 2:30 o'clock.

Bill Lanier, whose relief pitching saved the day against Ohio State in the inaugural last week, has drawn the starting mound assignment and also will have a new catcher behind the plate, in Zolton Stamus.

Steve Walker, regular receiver, is on the sidelines with an ailing arm. The rest of the line-up will be unchanged. Price at first, Williams at second, Berg, shortstop, and Stapleton, third, will comprise the infield. Horn, Webb and Johnson will patrol the outfield. This aggregation satisfactorily demonstrated its hitting power against the Buckeyes, and if Lanier delivers there should be little doubt about the outcome.

The Catamounts were to have played Maryland yesterday, but wet grounds intervened.

Dr. Dexter Fellows Is Caught Speechless—Almost, But Averts Such a Catastrophe

By Jack Diamond.

NEW YORK, April 2.—For a moment it appeared Dr. Dexter Fellows would be caught speechless. You cannot imagine what a catastrophe that would have been.

He had been rolling those splendid adjectives off his tongue with the combined effect of woodwinds and brasses, of machine guns shattering the stillness of the night, of Zephyrus whistling dolefully through the treetops, of Joe Louis beating out an incessant punching bag tattoo with his rattlesnake left.

The question was almost like a quick punch that caught him off his balance. For an instant the dapper doctor spluttered.

"New" boomed Dr. Fellows. "What has the circus got this year that's new? Tell me, young man, what new animals are there? Just you tell me, gad-dummit, and we'll get 'em for you."

He recovered and picked up momentum again as he went. "There's nothing new under the sun," rattled off the resplendent harlequin of spring, for although the vernal equinox may come a fortnight or so earlier it's really jumping the gun until Dr. Dexter arrives.

"The Scriptures are your authority for that. Even George Washington, Father of His Country, is down on record as attending a performance after his inauguration.

"As a matter of fact, we do have ponies coming here from Central Africa, only 22 inches high. If they're an inch higher, we're not taking them.

"What can they do? Why, a beast of burden that high could carry a pint of milk—or even post a letter for you!

"The point is that Dr. Blair up at the Bronx Zoo never has a heat of such a beast. Can you imagine all the confusion that will cause in the Bronx?

"And what a masterpiece that is!—if we are importing an animal of which Dr. Blair has never heard!" Dr. Fellows, who has "covered the country from cover to cover," was persuaded to confess that the big show arrives here over the weekend from its Sarasota, Fla., winter quarters.

"Then," he continued, giving his elegant waxed moustache a new twist, "there'll be a flourish of trumpets, the ringmaster will blow his silver whistle, and the greatest conglomeration of cataclysmic wonders in all its unrivaled magnificence . . .

This was the point at which he outdistanced us and when we caught

Dunlap Breaks Amateur Mark For Course

Defending Titlist Shoots a 69 in Pinehurst Tournament.

By the Associated Press.

PINEHURST, N. C., April 2.—George T. Dunlap, Jr., defending his North and South amateur title, set a new amateur record of 69 over the par 71 No. 2 championship course today in qualifying for the semi-final round.

Dunlap's sensational round was at the expense of Richard Tufts, of Pinehurst, 7 and 6.

Meeting in the lower bracket will be W. E. Stockhausen, New York, who eliminated J. B. Ryerson, Cooperstown, N. Y., at the twelfth hole, and A. C. Giles, New York, who defeated Pat Mucci, Newark, N. J., 5 and 4.

Dunlap, three times North and South winner, went out in 34, but encountered "momentary trouble on the long tenth when his third shot carried into a bunker. But he exploded out five feet from the pin and holed out for a par five. He went down a nine-footer on the twelfth for a birdie and cupped a five-footer on the fourteenth for another birdie.

Dunlap came to the seventeenth needing 3-4 or a 67 to better the best card by any professional in the last two weeks of the North and South Open, but was trapped and required a fourth. He pulled his second shot into a trap on the eighteenth and took a five.

Utah Courtmen, Rinaldis May Play Here

By George Considine.

ERNIE DUSEK, substituting for Yvon Robert who injured himself in a match Wednesday, required 31 minutes last night to throw Alphonse Bisignano in the feature of the weekly wrestling show at the Turner Arena. Night on to 2,500 spectators witnessed the struggle, which was climaxed with a rolling body press.

Perhaps the best battle of the indoor season, the match was an exhibition of clever workmanship, spiced with several interludes of tough and tumble antics. As is his wont, Dusek opened the festivities with a wide-swinging right and had worked up to his third struggle before Alphonse commenced firing.

And so the mighty men of mail swapped slugs in the center of the rostrum until Ernie dropped to the mat his eyes shining like the harvest moon. Bisignano pounced on his man and held him down for a 2-count. Dusek squirming to the safety of the ropes.

At the 10-minute mark, Alphonse, thoroughly fed up over the sitchy-sitch, was making Ernie look like a feather in the breeze. He threw Ernie into the laps of the ringriders and then went out and threw him back again.

Later Dusek somehow managed to clamp on a variation of Brother Rudy's famous cradle split. Some things must have been wrong with it though because every time Ernie plopped his opponent's shoulders down, he pinned his own nape, too. It was embarrassing not only for Dusek but also for Referee Cydne Burns, who couldn't make up his mind just whose shoulders to watch.

In what appeared to be the final act, Bisignano dropped back on the ropes, sprang heading toward the ropes, and landed squarely on the Dusek elbow. Momentarily dazed, Al rolled to the mat and fell victim to that decisive body press.

In the preliminaries Abe Goldberg body-slammed Jim Wallis in 21 minutes. Mike Masurki worked to a 30-minute draw with Jim Coffield, and Dr. Harry Field subdued Al Taroff with a flying buckles, or something, in 15½ minutes.

Washington Gun Club Hold Shoot Tomorrow

The Washington Gun Club will meet tomorrow at 1:30 p. m. in its regular weekly meet. A silver trophy will be awarded to the winner on the first 50 18-yard targets. Following this event, the 25-target handicap contest for Thaw and Fries, Beall & Sharp trophies will be held.

April events are particularly important, as they immediately precede the annual D. C. amateur championship tournament, scheduled for May 1 and 2.

Decide who is to represent the District in the "Champion of Champions" shoot, held at Vandana, Ohio, 2 up.

Results:
Men (St. John's) defeated Ray, 2 up; Braun (St. John's) defeated Landor, 3 and 1; Best (St. John's) 2 and 1; Regan (St. John's) defeated France, 1 up; Sullivan (St. John's) defeated Langan, 4 and 2; Best ball—Tech, 1 up.

Slightly Upset Over Missed Flying Tackle

Ernie Dusek, the gentleman standing on his head, appears to be slightly upset over missing a flying tackle aimed at Alphonse Bisignano, the other half of last night's feature mat show at the arena. Alphonse is taking it all in from a comfortable position on the resin rug. Dusek finally won the decision, to the utter disgust of Alphonse.

Nats Beat Cards As Newsom Stars

LITTLE left-hander who formerly was with the Athletics, the Nats amassed their early lead. Seven of their nine hits they collected in the first four innings.

Again Freitas and Paul Derringer thereafter they were limited to two hits, one of which was Travis' second double, and failed to score.

Meanwhile, Washington's pitchers, who of late have been making suckers out of their critics, were holding the Reds to six hits. The one hit that Appleton allowed them in the last three innings was a single by Goodman in the eighth that enabled the Reds to avert a second straight shut-out.

Performing in the city where he first won fame in organized baseball back in 1929, Newsom bore down on the Reds with great delight. He strutted from the mound in the second and after leaving a Red stranded on second base which he had reached with only one out, and in the third, after he walked Freitas and pitched a double to Kampouris that put Freitas on third, he was positively great.

With every ounce of strength he possessed, he fired three strikes past Walker, walked Cuyler to fill the bases, and retired Gooden and Riggs on pop-ups, finally quitting the box with a wave of recognition to his Macon friends.

The Reds asked for it when the Nats took a 2-to-0 lead in the second inning. Meyers at shortstop fumbled Powell's easy grounder to first. The inning, then, Travis whaled a long double into leftfield and Powell scored.

Buddy Lewis wasted a single in the third inning, but his single in the fourth wasn't wasted. The bases were full after a single by Reynolds, a hit-and-run double by Joe Kuhel and a walk to Hill, when Lewis came to bat. The incredible hitting spree in which young Lewis still finds himself happily engaged now numbers one more bright episode.

Allison Scores Net Victory At Houston

No. 1 Ace Beats Floridian Only After Struggle in Red Oaks Play.

By the Associated Press.

HOUSTON, Tex., April 2.—Wilmer Allison, whose racquet has cut down such tennis greats as Fred Perry, had to call forth all his court cunning today to vanquish an unawed Lakeland, Fla., ace, Arthur Hendrix.

Allison, the Nation's No. 1 star and captain of the United States Davis Cup team in the approaching match with Mexico, finally won the deciding set, 6-4, to gain the quarter-finals of the River Oaks tournament.

The third round match had been halted by darkness yesterday after Hendrix captured the first set 8-6, and Allison took the second, 7-5.

Allison was superior in service and net play.

58.94 on February 29. The 16 South American issues in the index rose 0.36 per cent, while the four Australasian issues fell 0.78 per cent.

Military Reign Hinted in Spain If Reds Revolt

Zamora Is Represented as Being Ready to Set Up Dictatorship.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, April 2.—Informed sources declared tonight President Niceto Alcalá Zamora is prepared to form a Nationalist government which would be virtually a military dictatorship if revolutionary threats of rebellion show the slightest sign of materializing.

Since the Left election victory, both Communists and Revolutionary Socialists, whose ideas are identical, have been declaring their intention to upset the government of Premier Manuel Azana by force "at the first opportune moment."

The series of post-election disturbances following a Leftist election victory is known to have produced much dissatisfaction among military elements.

Although flatly denied by the government, insistent reports describe how the army recently issued a virtual ultimatum to the premier it would take over maintenance of order unless the government brought an end to the terrorism which has claimed more than 100 lives and caused many millions of pesetas in property damage.

The revolutionaries' open admission that they are arming and merely biding their time has produced much concern in many quarters, as a rift widened in the "Left United Front."

The uncertainty of the situation produced a sharp reaction on business generally. President Zamora is known to be most anxious to end this uncertainty as soon as possible and is reported to be determined to take drastic steps should the situation show signs of becoming more aggravated.

Local Man Killed In Virginia Crash

Lawrence A. Enos, 27, a meat cutter, of 2718 Seventeenth street northeast, was killed instantly yesterday morning, when the car he was operating struck a truck at Corbin, Carolina County, 10 miles south of Fredericksburg, Va.

Arthur Rector, 30, also of this city, the driver of the truck, will appear tomorrow at 10 a. m. in Bowling Green to answer technical charges.

Enos was driving toward Washington, while Rector's truck was traveling south. Witnesses reported that Enos' car swept into the center of the road while going around a curve. He struck the truck and was instantly killed. Rector was not injured.

County officials said that no inquest would be held, as it was evident that Enos' death was accidental.

Members of Enos' family have gone to Fredericksburg, where the body was taken, and will bring it back to Washington.

5 Virginia Projects Get Larger Grants

Richmond, Va., April 2 (AP).—Five increased WPA grants, amounting to $75,235 for projects in Roanoke, Norfolk and Petersburg were announced today by William A. Smith, State WPA administrator.

A project now under way in Roanoke, to clean woodland acreage, construct small bridges and walks, lay drains, build roads, tennis courts and rest houses in the city parks received the largest allotment, $18,632.

The town of Craddock, Norfolk County, received an increased allotment of $13,242 for construction work on an 8-inch concrete sewer and 28 manholes. The project is sponsored by the county board of supervisors.

Norfolk sewing room projects were given an additional grant of $16,499, and a handicraft and wood-working project designed to manufacture and repair furniture for the use of needy families was allotted an increase of $9,377.

A sewing-room project in Petersburg received an increased appropriation of $15,485.

Rockville Courthouse Scene of Auto Theft

While practically the entire Montgomery County police force was guarding the courthouse in Rockville, Md., yesterday a thief stole the automobile of Miss Mary T. Nicholson, of Rockville, parked along the street from the courthouse.

The policemen were guarding the courthouse during the trial of Ernest Myers, charged in the death of Allen B. Wilson, newspaper route agent. The windows of the county police headquarters also cover the scene of the robbery.

Boys' Club Plans Camp on New Site

Frank R. Jelleff, president of the Boys' Club of Washington, yesterday announced his standing committee. The club has an unusual program scheduled and the committee will be expected to function at once.

Chief among summer plans is the establishment of the new camp, to be opened by the National Park Service on the Chopawamsic site at Dumfries, Va., near Quantico. The club has applied to the National Park Service for a lease on the boys' unit which is to be finished this spring. If this request is granted, the present camp site on the Wicomico River will be abandoned for this season at least. Acquisition of this camp site will effect certain economies which will enable the club to take additional boys to camp without increasing its camp budget from the Community Chest.

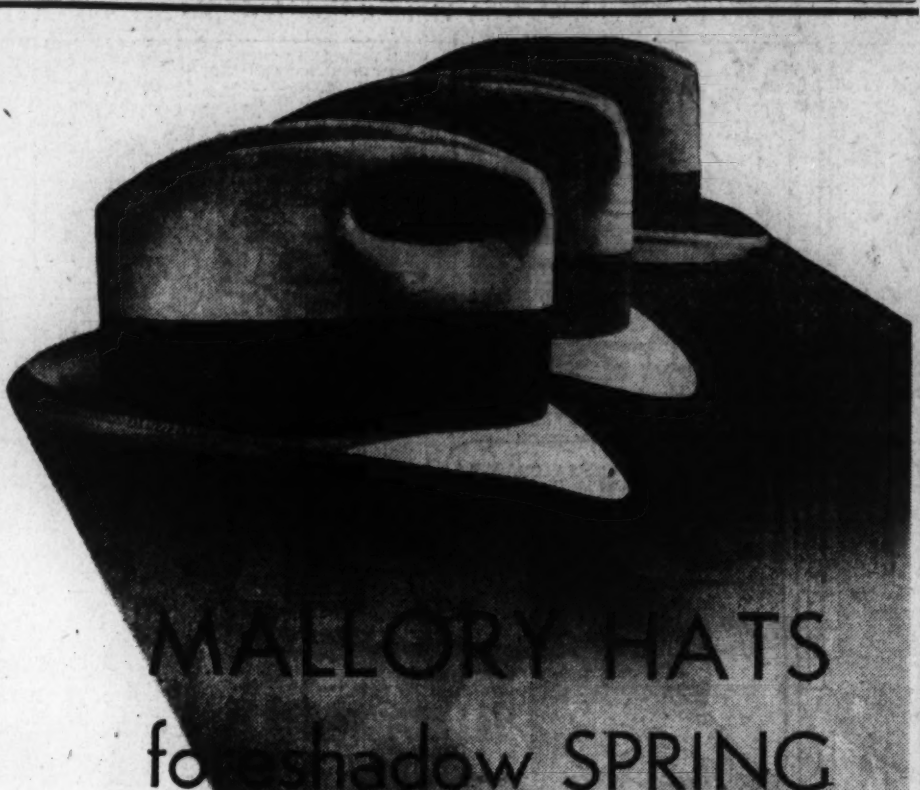

Committees named follow:

Executive—Henry N. Bawner, Jr., chairman; Frank R. Jelleff, Roland Whitehurst, Harold A. Brooks, Lloyd B. Wilson, Col. Henry P. Erwin and Sidney F. Tallaferra.
House—William E. Russell, chairman; Dr. Chester D. Swaps, Wash. B. Williams, Charles H. Fardoe and Clarence L. Harding.
Publicity—Joseph D. Kaufman, chairman; Foster M. Reeder, Henry Schaffert, Dr. Chester D. Swaps and Col. Wesley Brown.
Finance and Building—Harold A. Brooks, chairman; Andrew Landrus, Clarence F. Norman, Jr., Charles H. Tompkins and Eugene Meyer.
Georgetown branch—Col. Stephen Bonnell, chairman; Admiral Spencer S. Wood, Dr. Henry W. Draper, the Rev. Charles Warner, Frank A. Kerr and Sidney F. Tallaferra.
Camp—Albert P. E. Horn, chairman; William E. Russell, Clarence L. Harding, Joseph D. Kaufman and Charles H. Fardoe.

Delay Granted for Start Of Motor Freight Line

Richmond, Va., April 2 (AP).—The State corporation commission today authorized W. W. Estes, trading as Estes Express Lines, to delay inauguration of freight motor vehicle service between Chase City and South Boston for a period of 30 days from March 17, on account of highway conditions.

An order was entered granting Johnston-Willis Sanatorium, Inc., St. Elizabeths Hospital, Inc., Stuart Circle Hospital Corporation, Retreat for the Sick and the Medical College of Virginia, permission to extend to existing contract holders under the securities law the right to emergency service in nonparticipating hospitals, in accordance with certain specified conditions.

Season to Feature Flowery Evening Dresses With New Dash and Color

Tunics Lend Novel Touch; Belts Broad

Molyneux Offers Model With Accordion Pleated Skirt.

Appliques Bounce Back With Sudden Popularity.

By Frances Mangum,
The Post Fashion Editor.

AS GAY and colorful—and refreshing—as a bouquet of spring flowers are the evening dresses this season. They have that certain something that makes for dash and flare and gives you an enchanted sort of charm.

Whether you choose one that is sinuous and suave or one that is flimsy as a cloud and as daintily lovely as a spray of cherry blossoms, you'll be sure to find your frock has an intriguing individuality.

It is almost unbelievable that from season to season designers are able to bring out new silhouettes and a thousand new details. And yet, what could be more proof of their amazing creativeness than this spring's formal gowns?

Particularly new and interesting are those with the tunics. Many houses are showing print dresses with sheeny satin tunics, others taffeta tunics over crepe skirts.

Belts Go With Tunics.

Hitting a new high in feminine appeal are those cobwebby lace tunics with tight waists and full flares around the bottom.

Worn with many of these tunics are wide belts—some as wide as six inches—and in a variety of colors. Some tie in large striking bows or bow notes, others, more tailored, have plain buckles or clasps.

Molyneux, one Parisian designer who is particularly tunic minded this spring, favors tunics worn over full pleated skirts, accordion pleated skirts. One of his most fascinating frocks has a vivid print taffeta tunic, sleeveless, low in back and front with a large bouquet of flowers at the front V. This is completed with a plain black skirt with myriads of tiny pleats.

Appliques Are Back.

Even newer than the tunics and certainly as high in fashion favor are the organdy and mousseline de soie frocks trimmed with embroidered edging, dressmaker type. Many trim and striking effects may be achieved in this way by using the white edging to contrast with the dark blue, black, or garnet gown.

Back this season with an unprecedented return to popularity are appliques. They give a fluttery line to hems and edges of capes and pelerines and shoulder straps. When done in prints, both chiffon and crepe they're especially attractive. Many designers have used them with winsome effects to indicate the waistline.

It is rather significant that some of the most successful evening gowns shown at the Paris openings were in large stripes and flamboyant plaids in as many colors as there are.

Schiaparelli Displays Oyster-White Model

Paris—Schiaparelli shows spice brown for evening and an oyster white which she calls "hellum." She also features violet, Russian lilac, blues and greens. Victor Stiebel features black with pastels for afternoon and evening, including cyclamen pink, and combinations such as allegory with primrose, brick pink with dusty blue, and loganberry with peppermint pink.

STRIKING AND DISTINCTIVE is this navy blouse mousseline de soie summer formal frock shown below. Lending it infinite chic is the organdie lace paneling down the front leading off from the border of the lapels. To the right a stunning evening gown of white crinkly crepe splashed over with enormous red, blue and cerise tulips with green stems. The shawl drapes are jewel blue.

If you wish to know where these gowns may be purchased call The Post Fashion Editor, National 4200, Ext. 323.

Shoes Made of Grass, Woven Hemp Due Soon

Don't be surprised this summer when you see shoes made out of grass. Yessir, one firm is already busy planning pair after pair to be manufactured from a Chinese grass, worked in braids. The color—natural string.

Other novelty shoes are going to be made from a woven hemp and dyed every color under the sun. A striped awning material is being used for others which are lined with terry cloth.

King Cotton to Reign Anew, Prophets Say

Fashion prophets say that King Cotton will reign this summer. Early showings bear them out. Not only for daytime, and playtime frocks are cotton, but formal and afternoon dresses as well.

Pique is a contender for leading honors. Even bedspread piques which are made up into jackets that may be worn with almost any type frock.

Gala Display of Spring Fashions Featured By Connecticut Avenue Association Today

IF YOU'VE NOTICED an unusual hustle and bustle on Connecticut avenue this week there's a good reason why. The style show and exhibit staged semi-annually by the Connecticut Avenue Association is taking place today at the Mayflower Hotel and ever since last Monday there's been much ado in making preparations for it.

The whole first floor of the hotel is literally turned into a miniature shopping center, where the stores have their booths and exhibits. In the grand ballroom there's a long runway to accommodate the beautiful mannequins who will saunter forth this afternoon bedecked in all that's splendid.

Sure enough, if you want to see what's what in hats, evening gowns, daytime frocks, sports costumes, shoes, dressing robes, you've only to come to one of the style shows today. There are going to be three, one at 5, the others at 8 and 10 p. m. The 10 p. m. show grew out of popular demand. So great the crowd each season—and so insistent on seeing the fashion parade—that this last show just naturally had to be. The first year the show and exhibit took place about 4,000 people responded to the invitation, the next year 8,000 and last year 10,000. So this year you'll probably find all Washington there.

And what fun it is! Such displays of gleaming, glittering jewels! Such a wealth of furs! And there's glassware that would capture the fancy of a czar! And furniture, and luggage, and, in fact, just about "everything nice."

Announcing the style show this season will be Miss Audrey Sieber, of the Earle Theater.

Tint Important In Face Powder

Care Should Also Be Used in Applying Just the Right Quantity.

POWDER is the simplest of all your make-up problems. There are only two points to be considered. Don't use too much and don't use too light a color.

Few women realize how many different skin tints there really are. They classify themselves as light or dark and let it go at that. Actually certain very pale blondes have a distinct bluish cast to their skins, and the coloring of dusky brunettes may actually be olive green. Pink and deep rose are ordinary skin tones, but don't forget the difficult complexion that is distinctly yellow.

Intriguing Spring Styles Give "It" to Shoes and Stir Feminine Interest

Wide Straps Make Foot Look Tinier

Popularity of Suits Puts Blue in Place of Favorite Color.

By The Post Fashion Editor.

INTEREST in shoes this season is running strong, according to the managers of shops up and down Connecticut avenue.

But just why? That's what we'd like to know.

There are at least half a dozen answers. First of all, shoe styles are intriguing. If shoes can have personality, they surely have this spring. There's an unexpectedness about them, too.

For instance: Have you seen those with the Quakerish flaps across the front? Flaps, mind you, that button on and off, and are different colors on both sides? And have you seen those dahlia red leather shoes with the roundish, squarish, boxish toes? Or those suede shoes with straps almost 2 inches? Or the gabardine and patent leather sandals with the perforated T straps?

Suits Are Popular.

There's no use naming any more. You have only to take a casual glance in any shoe shop show window along your route to see the dozens of different, and yes, we must confess it, devastating things that shoes are up to.

Because of the popularity of suits this spring and the high percentage of navy blue suits, it seems that blue shoes have been about the best sellers with the London, or luggage tan running a close second. Black patent leather, of course, is always a good bet and continues to be this season.

Coming more and more into the fashion limelight are the combination leather and gabardine shoes. For those who work and must have practical, and comfortable shoes, and who also demand smart shoes, these gabardines solve the problem. Of course as the season advances linen will undoubtedly take the fabric honors.

Sandals Irresistible.

Shoe dealers are already prophesying a large demand for sandals when the season is a bit more advanced. And small wonder! Have you seen some of the new sandals? They're that irresistible! As feminine and frill looking as you like but with a remarkable sturdiness. And such a variety of styles. Some are cut absolutely to the bone, others are lattice-like with criss crossing straps.

For the most part heels have steadied down to a cross between "high" and "very low." They're frequently squared off to give a saucy block effect.

At present it seems that straps are bidding fair to supersede oxfords. And according to the word of the younger customers the wider the straps the smarter the shoes. And there's a reason for this, too—wide straps, they say, make the foot look smaller.

Less Uniformity Seen in New Hats

Less uniformity is noticed in the new hats than was previously the case. Besides the general tendencies already mentioned, there are new interpretations of Bretons by Agnes in grosgrain and rayon on ribbons with handwork on the crown. The crowns of her Abyssinian Negus hats are shaped something like a tiled roof and her Chinese caps are extremely pointed. Talbot shows little Flemish bonnets that are very cute. Among the Catherine de Medici coiffures and Reine Margot bonnets at Marie-Antoinette's are models in crocheted rayon straw with open work, others in laize of slit cellulose film and bright straw of this weave.

Smart New Footwear Comes in Rainbow Hues

This is a season of inconsistencies in the fashion world. While girls of all ages and types are going in for frivolous feathers on their new spring hats, their feet are ensconced in the trimly tailored shoes with built-up heels that make walking a pleasure instead of just a means of getting about.

Not that they are lacking in eye appeal. The smartest new footwear comes in rainbow hues. But here's the good news—for the first time in years, Connecticut avenue has put its o. k. on shoes that are unquestionably comfortable to wear.

IT'S back to bonnets, to judge by the demure model (left). The shoes in the top picture are black patent leather with the flattering wide straps. It would be difficult to resist those smart black and white pumps to the right, below.

Orchid Coloring Will Feature Easter Parades of the Nation

Gloves in Smart Ensembles Should Match the Flower While Hats, Shoes and Bags Harmonize With the Dress or Suit.

CATTLEYA IS AN ORCHID species, but it is also one of Patou's new colors, and both the flower and the color will be much worn as accents in Easter parades all over the country. What could be more charming than a black or navy blue ensemble with a corsage of orchids matched by putting on gloves worn over the coat or suit sleeve? Hat, shoes and bag should be the costume color, for too many matched accessories spoil the desired effect rather than enhance it.

The French have certainly taken to orchids this season. Molyneux contributes a charming addition to the growing list. He shows a black silk faille turban with two white and purple orchids over the forehead and a taupe veil. Some smart woman is going to wear this with real orchids since one of our finest milliners has imported this chic turban and is suggesting this change to her customers.

There will be many tailored suits this Easter, but the details will be feminine. Frilly blouses, hats with veils and flowers, corsages or boutonnières of fresh flowers, colored

Dramatic Names Feature Dresses

In the collection of Elisabeth Hawes, noted designer, are some dresses dramatically named. One, "Lady Chatterley," is a street dress, with black, tight-fitting jersey top, a turtle neck and very full-skirted skirt of natural and black kaschmir, shirred on to the top at the natural waistline.

Next, "Joan of Arc," a tan mixture topcoat, with the tailored line emphasized with insets of the wrong side of the material. Also "Little Miss Muffet," a full, loose, natural linen blouse with three-quarter-length sleeves and green silk yoke, with a slightly flaring bias skirt of the green silk. "Circe" is a striped Rodier cotton dinner dress with exaggerated, square-cut hips. "Alice in Wonderland" is a dark green changeable taffeta, with tight-fitted waist, high, round neck, tight 6-inch sleeves, and the very wide, gored, pleated skirt. This one is made of 15 yards of material.

Fingernails Important As Aid to Color Scheme

It's the "little things" that make for smartness. Many a last year's hat is blossoming again because of a flower perked exactly at the front and many a pair of colored gloves has whipped a set of tweeds into the latest word from Paris. Fingernails are among the tiniest accessories you have, but the minute gloves come off, nails take the limelight. Accenting or harmonizing they are ten important notes on any color scheme. And discordant ones unless you watch them carefully.

Jewelry to Suit Every Hour Of Day in Vogue This Season

Collecting of Precious Gems Becomes Fad of Moving Picture Stars and Women of Fashion; Many Colored Stones Set in Gold.

JEWELRY FOR EVERY HOUR in the day is now in vogue. Collecting precious, real jewelry has become the fad of not only moving picture stars, but of other ladies of fashion as well. Women who already own fine collections of jewels are having them reset. Now that gold settings are again smart, many colored stones enhanced by this treatment are being remodeled.

The suit is the perfect setting for a fine fob watch, a beautiful wrist watch or a brooch or a clip watch. Brooches, worn at the neck of the new frilly blouses, are smart and if they support a fine and distinguished jewel they give tone and elegance to the street toilette.

Pearls are worn with all types of blouses. Pearl ear rings are rapidly gaining in popularity.

No jewel or decoration of any kind is as uniformly becoming and flattering to the wearer as pearls.

Cuff links and studs for women are again in vogue. Your mother or grandmother used to have sets of them which she kept in a little box made especially for them. They were of gold and enamel, of diamonds, of semiprecious stones, of filigree gold. The smartest tailor will sport a man-tailored blouse, and cuff links will be in the French cuffs. For the evening tailor little smart sets of studs, just like father's, are being worn, and even waistcoat buttons and sleeve buttons to match.

All of the jewelry men's clothing demands is being appropriated by women, even their scarf pins, collar pins and belt buckles.

Jewelry for formal afternoons is less ostentatious than that worn for evening.

Very clever women wear parts of very complete evening jewelry ensembles for afternoon. Diamonds seem to be increasing daily in demand, and even though crystal is so perishable, it is continuously combined with them.

One of the most beautiful necklaces we have seen was a choker made of diamond-set links joining oblong crystal links. There was one superb, deep, fiery aquamarine lying in the hollow of the neck—exquisitely refined and delicate, yet with all the distinction of a much more elaborate arrangement.

Daytime Fashions This Season Infinite Variety of Styles for Mothers and Daughters

New Honors Are Heaped Upon Tunics

Models in Checks and Plaids Offer Wide Scope in Use.

Redingotes Also Are High in Favor; Jacket Dress Now Popular.

By The Post Fashion Editor.

IF VARIETY is the spice of life, there's plenty of spice in the daytime fashions shown on Connecticut Avenue this season. Mothers and daughters alike are finding the style scene more arresting than ever, with many different types of costumes to choose from.

Lots of new honors are being heaped on tunics. They've been in for years, of course, but they're in this spring stronger than ever. (Incidentally, for both daytime and evening fashions.)

Especially popular are the crisp taffeta tunics which are suited to spring and summer. Some of these come in checks and plaids, others in floral prints. They are worn with dark plain skirts. However, there's no limiting their scope. Some all-print dresses are made with tunic and skirt of the same material and pattern.

An extremely practical way to make one costume into several is to have two or three tunics to one skirt—or vice versa.

Redingotes in Vogue.

Almost as high in favor as the tailored suits are the redingotes consisting of a woolen coat and print dress. Some stylists insist that this costume is even more becoming to the matron than the suit. Certainly it is infinitely economical. The coat is usually adapted to one of several dresses and therefore serves a purpose aside while the dress is by no means dependent on the coat for its style and attractiveness.

On the same idea are the jacket dresses which have woolen jackets suitable to other costumes. The usual jacket dress, however, is simply a dress-jacket outfit. On cooler days the jacket fills a special niche and need. When summer comes the jackets are laid aside except for street wear and the dress—just as the redingote frock—is independently useful.

Two other styles have won laurels this season.

Feature "Femininity."

Whether or not these are fads is yet to be seen. Some say no, since they are sponsored by some of the best dressmaking establishments in Paris. There's another factor, too, which might make them linger. They are universally favored for their femininity. However, there are those on the other side of the fence who maintain that petticoat dresses look "untidy." For the main part these objections refer to the dresses with the petticoats showing below the hemline. Bear in mind that there are many others with the petticoats only peeking through a slash in the skirt.

Giving somewhat of a petticoat effect are those frocks with ruffles around the hem.

Most Men Wear Garters Wrong

Clasp on Inside of Leg Adds to Comfort.

Most men don't know it, a survey shows, but garters are most comfortable when worn with the clasp pad on the inside of the leg. The survey disclosed that the American male usually wears his garters incorrectly, placing the pad either on the outside of the leg, or in front, over the bone.

And speaking of garter comfort, the new lightweight styles featuring mesh weaves are going to meet with real favor this summer. They're cool, dressy, comfortable and long lasting. A new "anti-oxidant" process being used by all manufacturers of quality garters keeps the elastic in shape indefinitely. (Nationally distributed in leading haberdashery shops).

Suspenders on Skirts

As New Paris Vogue

Is your newest skirt holder-upper a pair of suspenders instead of a belt? Chanel has started the fad in Paris.

The Margot influence has given us ruffs done in flaring white ermine on suits, in velvet, and in sheer white material fluted or finely pleated.

Shoes, Gloves, Purses Linked In Style Scheme

Similarity of Design or Color Makes the Connection.

By The Associated Press.

Shoes, bags and gloves have formed an "entente cordiale" in Easter fashions.

Though international politics may be in an unsettled state, the fashion world has pulled footwear, hand coverings and money pouches together in a triple alliance which, it declares, should "stick."

Not all of the three need be carved from the same map of materials. They need only to be linked in color or similarity of design. Harmony is the main idea, and here are some of the ways it is achieved.

Shoes and bag of the new "russet" calf and russet felt gloves worn with a brown or black suit. Gray suede shoes with brown alligator bag and gray suede gloves with a gray suit. Shoes of navy gabardine with straps, toe trimmings and heels of russet calf, bag of the same leather and navy blue doekin glove with a midnight blue suit.

It's complicated business, but dictators in the fashion world say it's worth the trouble for the harmony and chic achieved.

Spring shoes designed for the most "modern women" in the world have borrowed their ideas from history. Colonial shoes with squared toes and buckles caught over the tongue, adaptations of Grecian sandals and a modern version of Renaissance shoes which are cut out in a series of straps mounting high over the instep are all there. In the modernization of the designs the shoes show a decided note of independence. Lower heels—from an inch to an inch and a half in height—are much in vogue. Toes are often squared and heels beveled. Shoes show a tendency to rise over the instep again. The most varied fabrics and colors shown in many a year are seen.

Russet, navy blue, deep forest-green, luggage tan, sand, cinnamon and beige appear. Calf, kid, reptile leathers and patent leathers are all used, often combined with wool gabardine or tweed.

Deep green tweed or navy gabardine shoes with heels and bandings or russet calf rimming the lower part of the shoe, brown basket-weave braided leather trimmed with russet tips and sand-colored suede with brown lizard tips are the typical combinations. Besides these, there are many plain shoes of kid, calf or patent leather.

The gloves linked with them in the entente cordiale are exceedingly simple in design. Those worn with the new tailored suits which will lead the Easter parade are brief, easy fitting and generally made of doekin or suede.

Color Is Rampant This Season With New Tulip Mauve in Lead

Easter Parade to Make Florists' Shops Seem Dull by Comparison; Artificial Flowers Are Heralds of Chic for Spring.

The Easter parade will make florists' shops dull by comparison this spring.

For it's a season when color is rampant and artificial flowers are the heralds of chic.

Even the color splurge of last winter seems conservative when one views the hues that turn the windows of Connecticut Avenue into spring flower gardens.

In the matter of color firsts, the new tulip mauve, featured by fabric manufacturers in shading other hues slightly. Combining beautifully with wine, cinnamon and certain shades of blue, tulip mauve is one of those exciting new shades that seem to breathe the very essence of spring. It is equally as interesting in tweeds and lightweight wools as in silk and heavy sheer.

However, tulip mauve is only one of the many new shades that make the spring sartorial story even more exciting than ordinarily. There are mimosa, carnation, the latter a deep, rich red, violet, tulip red, a somewhat more vital shade than carnation; leaf green, arbutus pink, bachelor button blue, apricot beige and luggage tan, which sometimes goes high hat under the name of zinnia.

For a basic suit color navy is relegating even classic black to second place. Perhaps one reason for this is that it combines so happily with the new bright shades. Navy with mimosa accessories is the choice of many of the smartest women. But it's a toss-up whether navy and mimosa are a more popular combination than navy and carnation, navy and luggage tan or navy and tulip red. Both mimosa and daffodil are infallibly chic.

Prints More Formalized With Floral Groupings

This year's prints are more formalized than those of last year. Instead of all-over patterns, small groups of flowers are shown on clear backgrounds. Apart from the amusing animal and figure designs, there are various floral groupings in black silhouette on a white background.

Bright, Shiny Feathers, Quills Add Gay Note to Paris Hats

Clever Methods to Insure Chic Shining Touch for Spring Chapeaux Are Featured; Patent Leather Accessories Follow Keynote.

THERE'S NOTHING like something bright and crisp-looking to pick up a faded winter wardrobe. One of the smartest tricks of the latest Paris chapeaux are those new feathers and quills treated with a glycerine to make them bright and shiny. For instance, have you seen those positively tiny hats with a large, shiny rosette of feathers right in the front? The Rue de la Paix is flaunting them this spring, and they're very jaunty and military looking.

Or perhaps you prefer quills. In a recent important collection quills in black and green were featured on several hats. A pert quill sticks through the crown on a rakish slant or pierces an upturned brim dagger-wise. Other modish bits of millinery, going on the principle that two quills are better than one, cross them like swords in the cause of fashion.

Hats this season have other clever methods, too, of assuring that chic shining touch. Narrow folds of patent leather substitute for the accustomed ribbon bands on some of the more casual models, and flowers and fancies are made of it.

And speaking of patent leather, you'll never know till you see them, all the original things patent leather is doing to carry out through the entire ensemble the "shiny" note for which the hats set the key. All-patent sandals and bags and belts aren't the half of it. Patent also displays itself in deft new combinations with fabrics, as for instance, a smart pair of gabardine oxfords with instep stays of patent or a gabardine purse or belt striped in shining strips.

As for color, black patent, of course, is always with us—"licorice" black they call it this spring, but take a look, too, at the new shades. Blue or red or green or those new russet brown patents are practically guaranteed to keep you from the traditional spring- fever let-down.

And whisper, you can take a tip from the quill-makers to keep your patent accessories at their brightest and best. Rub them over occasionally with a clean cloth dipped in glycerine. It will keep them from drying and cracking and they'll last that much longer.

Tweed and Leather.

Paris (AP)—The combination of tweed and leather will be worn a great deal this spring. Some houses show woolen skirts worn with matching or contrasting jackets of suede, while others show jackets whose collars, cuffs, revers and pocket flaps are faced with suede or leather.

Summer Millinery.

Some materials favored for summer millinery are stitched pique and stiffened gingham, glazed chintz, and for beach wear, turkish toweling. For sport hats kid and chamamois are favored and combinations of straw and wool.

French Sports Clothes Take A Turn Toward Practicality

By The United Press.

One of the greatest faults to be found with Paris sports clothes in the past has been that they are made for the hot-house-plant type woman who never went beyond the fur robe on the back seat of a limousine. In recent years French women have become more athletically minded and sports clothes, accordingly, have become garments that are really practical for exercise.

One of the most practical and smartest suits for spring wear is in brown tweed with a straight skirt, kick pleat in front, and a three-quarter length coat fashioned with mannish revers. The coat is double breasted and trimmed with twin rows of brown leather buttons. The sleeves are modified leg-o-mutton variety with shoulder. Fullness is achieved by small gathers at the seam. With this is worn a jacket in a grey and creamy check mixture of the same tweed. The jacket is single breasted, fastening up the front with a row of small brown leather buttons, and is belted only in back.

More summery is a suit in a clear dark green linen which looks so much like wool tweed that you must touch it to make sure. The skirt has the same kick pleat in front, and the loose, straight jacket with leg-o-mutton sleeves has revers lined in a check linen in which red predominates.

Handbags of Pyralin.

Washable, colorful and of interesting texture are the new handbags made of pyralin in mother-of-pearl effect. One model is a square envelope type with full length top clasp of plain textured pyralin and long double loop-top straps of leather.

The Season's Hair Styles Are Extremely Feminine and Easy to Arrange

Mannish Mode Is Important in Fashion Picture, But Exaggerated Shingle Cuts Are Definitely "Out."

By Gertrude Hummer.

THIS IS THE TIME of year when women, who apparently have been perfectly content with their coiffures and complexions, begin to think of new hair styles and reconditioning the skin. So if you want your hair to be gleamingly shiny and your skin to be smooth and clear to set off your new spring outfit, start right now to get them in shape.

Visit one of the local beauty shops and consult the hair designer about the new style hairdresses. It will surprise you what a new coiffure will do to your spirits. This season's hair styles are extremely feminine. The new designs are fresh looking and different but are so simply arranged that you will be able to care for them yourself between visits to the hairdressers.

If your face can stand it, wear your hair back. This type of hairdress will emphasize your best feature and will give you a clean-cut, youthful look. Although the mannish mode is important in the fashion picture, your hair should not be sleeked back, but arranged in a soft and femininely alluring style.

Curls Will Be Soft.

There will be plenty of curls, but they will not be tight, hard knots. They will be soft ones that can be brushed over your finger. Waves will not have a freshly set look. They will be the type that can be combed and brushed as soon as you leave the dryer.

If your forehead is too high, arrange your hair with a few soft curls and bangs. Tight curls and bangs, perfectly straight ones and the bushy type are definitely out. Exaggerated shingle hair cuts are also out of the coiffure picture.

After you have decided on the way you will arrange your hair, turn your efforts to beautifying it. Brush and comb your hair four or five minutes every day with a medium brush and comb. Don't use a fine comb or a stiff brush, for it will tear your hair and scratch your scalp.

If your hair is dry get hot oil shampoo at your favorite beauty shop, or if you can't go to the shop give yourself oil treatments. Massage your scalp every night with a lubricating scalp pomade or oil. Brush your hair vigorously, for it exercises the scalp and stimulates the oil glands and helps to keep the hair supple and glossy.

Hair Needs Fresh Air.

For excessively oily hair wash your hair regularly once or twice a week. Use a good hair shampoo if you do it yourself. Massage your scalp with a scalp tonic every night and then brush your hair to let the hair to cleanse it of oil and dust.

Whenever you possibly can go without your hat. Your hair, like your skin, needs fresh air and sunshine. Don't wet your hair when combing it. For the over-use of the scalp, the oil glands in the scalp and sometimes causes the hair to fall out.

While you are getting your hair and scalp in condition, give a little attention to your skin. The first step in reconditioning your skin is to see that it has lots of nourishment. Use plenty of lubricating cream and suppling lotion, very little soap or astringent and as little make-up as possible.

Don't Stretch Neck.

For normal skin before retiring smooth on a cleansing cream and remove with tissues. Then smooth a suppling cream over your face and neck and pat it in with a face patter until you have produced a pink glow. Do not stretch your neck. But pat the suppling cream around it and pat a brisk tattoo under the chin until your skin is decidedly rosy. Pat along the contour line from the center of your chin to the muscle in front of your ear on either side of the face, then across the corners of your mouth and across the laughter lines toward your ears. Pat gently from the center of the chin across the cheeks to the outer corners of your eyes. Pat lightly around your eyes with your fingertips and on your forehead with an upward movement. It is well to leave a little cream on all night.

In the morning smooth on cleansing cream and remove as the night before with tissues. Apply a skin lotion with a piece of absorbent cotton. Apply a small amount of astringent cream and smooth it over the face and neck, patting gently with the fingers until it is entirely absorbed.

Cleanse Face Often.

If your skin is oily wash your face with soap and warm water every night at bedtime. It is a good idea, however, to smooth on a little cleansing cream or cold cream a few minutes before washing to help soften the dust and powder which has been mixed with the oil in your pores.

For excessively oily skin avoid using creams after washing your face at night. If you are troubled with coarse pores, use a refining or astringent lotion or skin tonic after washing your face at night.

In the morning wash your face again with soap and warm water. Cleanse your face frequently during the day. In fact every time you renew your make-up. Use a liquid cleanser for this type of skin.

For a dry skin use a cleansing cream or cold cream several times during the day, to remove drying dust and make-up. By using this cream you will restore the natural moisture and oil to your skin. Use very mild astringents and skin tonics. Before going out, use a cold cream or tissue cream to protect your skin against exposure to the weather.

Film Actresses Vary Recipes For Keeping Fit

Jean Arthur Hates Diets; Molly Lamont Advises Dancing Course.

MOTION PICTURE work is hard on the figure—what with irregular working hours, hot studio lights and really strenuous nerve-racking labor. Motion picture cameras have a tendency to make the player look at least 10 pounds more than she actually is and consequently she is always faced with the problem of keeping her weight at par. Each film personality has her own method of keeping trim.

Jean Arthur doesn't believe in diets. No eating by prescribed formula of so many calories per day for her, she declares. She drinks plenty of milk but it doesn't add to her weight. She also eats spinach, but fairly adores steak and potatoes. She insists that hard work at the studio and plenty of sleep helps her maintain an even weight.

Molly Lamont, the South African beauty, advises dancing as an excellent weight-control. If you want to keep slim and fit, perfect your poise and at the same time enjoy yourself, just take a course in ballet dancing.

"Dancing is great fun," says Miss Lamont. "In addition, there is nothing which gives one so much grace and fitness. It also increases poise and keeps one from being self-conscious or awkward."

If you are underweight, on the other hand, take Wendy Barrie's tip and drink two quarts of goat's milk each day and cut down on the number of cigarettes you smoke.

From London comes the news that clean cut, tailored hats are becoming increasingly popular. Young Derek Skelton, who has a growing reputation for originality in millinery, says he is favoring hard brims with no dips or curves, and shallow crowns.

Bette Davis Boasts Robes, Not Trousers

Negligee and Gown Replace Pajamas.

Mme. Negligee has trailed gracefully into the boudoir and the drawing room, flipped her train imperiously at tailored Mr. Pajamas, and sent him running on his wide legs right out the door.

Yessir—in Hollywood—the negligee and the hostess gown are firmly established again for home wear, and pajamas, like the underdog, can't come in the house any more.

Bette Davis, who once lounged exclusively in pajamas and slacks, now boasts two new robes where formerly she would have chosen trousers. One, a pale blue metal cloth hostess gown, featuring a diagonally treated drop-shoulder line, flowing panel sleeves and train, will be worn in Bette's own home. The other, a deep navy blue starched chiffon with full skirt printed with gay-colored balloons, has a huge, face-framing ruffle and a multi-colored "spaghetti" waist, and Bette wears it in "The Golden Arrow."

with ruffles of tulle, gauze and ostrich fronds. When flowers are used he prefers a single striking bloom to bouquets.

One of his most interesting models conform accurately to any lines. It resembles more than anything else an Indian squaw's head-dress with feathers standing up in back.

Mr. Skelton is avoiding hats which show a Chinese influence, because he says these lines have become hackneyed and to his way of thinking, "are about played out."

Style in Luggage Just Myth; Canvas Coverings Are Favored

SO-CALLED style in luggage doesn't exist despite the many evolutions and changes it has passed through during the last few years. Canvas instead of leather for covering of porters' or hand luggage is now claiming its rightful place in this industry. First, because it is more substantial, and second, because many more distinctive and lasting designs may be made from it than leather. Particularly is it so today since we have learned to apply to its surface what is known as a pyroxylin finish, which is much more dirt-resisting than leather.

Distinction in this instance does not mean style. To the experienced traveler it is a means of preventing luggage from going astray, mostly by thoughtless travelers who mistake it for their own. The family luggage should match. There is no such thing as men's and women's luggage as far as outward appearance is concerned.

Many think that canvas is summertime luggage. Others think it is for women, while still another group believe it light in weight. None of these definitions are a fact. It is purely for distinction, i.e., ease of identification at railroad landing platforms, docks, airfields.

Style does play a part, however, in your personal, or what is called by some, fitted or en route luggage. This is different from porter or hand luggage inasmuch as it is purchased from the viewpoint of good looks, and nothing known today is as good-looking as leather. The men mostly cling to the good-looking mannish sun tan cowhides while the finest women's cases are made of the more beautiful leathers from the smaller animals, as the goat, from which the well-known Morocco comes. Pressed Morocco, or what is known as Ecraze, is considered the most beautiful and stylish leather made. A case of this leather, outfitted with genuine cloisonne of your favored color and outside protected with a delicate suede cloth cover to match your traveling suit, is considered the last word. Beauty, remember, is always in style. This case should be carried by the owner or her maid and not given to porters.

Applying Brush Important Part In Care of Hair

Tonic and Massage Equally Necessary to Obtain Best Results.

WOMEN know—because beauty operators, scalp specialists and various articles on the subjects have told them so—that brushing is one of the most important items in the care of the hair. That is correct as far as it goes. But tonics and massage and the method of using the brush are equally important. Many women spend a great deal of energy in this process and yet do very little good, merely because they do not know how to use their brushes.

To begin with, the brush itself should have flexible bristles of good quality. The tonic should be selected according to the needs of your scalp, whether it be oily or dry. Apply the tonic at the roots of the hair as you part it. Next, massage the scalp using the balls of the fingers (never the ends) until the skin feels loose and tingles because of quickened circulation. Last of all use the brush. Stray by strand, start at the scalp and brush up and out to the very ends of the hair. Continue this treatment until you have reached every part of the scalp.

This, of course, does muss a wave, but what matter? The wave can be combed down again and pressed back into place.

The tonic and massage need not be used each time you brush—but remember—be sure to brush every night.

In the Flash of a Second—

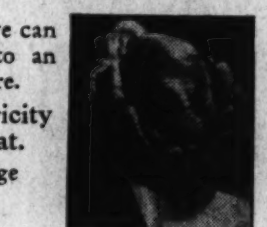

Our new Permanent Wave can transform your hair into an enchanting Spring coiffure.

Modern Age Is Reflected In the Home

Furnishings No Longer Copies of Periods of the Past.

Clutter and Confusion Give Way to Balance and Restraint.

By Marianna von Allesch.

WE BUY hats, dresses, shoes inspired by Kandinsky, Van Gogh and Derain. Powder boxes, laxatives, cough remedies, exhibited on drug store shelves; meat extracts and crackers displayed in our groceries; posters and billboards suggest a Picasso's fair, Laurencin's palette. We accept this without a thought and do not even attempt to revolt. But when we enter our homes, the compromise begins—it has to be a French provincial milieu; or a carved Italian chest here, a curved English sofa there, a bit of Spanish wrought iron, or Chinese figurines scattered all over. We live in "style shops."

Why? Because we cling to the reminiscences of our forefathers, to tradition, to empty emblems which have lost their reality. What we want just as much in our homes is style; and style, the dictionary tells us, is "the distinction or characteristic mode of presentation in any art, employment or product," and personal atmosphere.

In Times Past.

In past periods, furniture, textiles, architecture, fashions and all the arts have been a definite expression of the time. When we think of the mystic spires of the Gothic cathedrals and their ascending arches; the Renaissance with its era of glory and pride, expressed in heavy and massive furniture and costumes, stiff materials and strong and full colors; or of the Baroque, with its decadent ornamentation overflowing with curves and embellishment in regard to furniture and dresses, elaborate wigs, hand-embroidered silks, lacey jabots and gold braids; or, we visualize the Biedermeier period with its strength, sincerity and restraint as a revolution against decadent aristocracy; then we must feel the close relation between the philosophy and atmosphere of each time. The nineteenth century and the nouveau riche manifested itself in a display of wealth. A period of imitation resulted. Homes were filled with horseshoe and shell mirrors and paper flowers, all trying to represent something else. Dresses were encumbered with bustles, pleats and ruffles. Everything was a copy, nothing was genuine. As applied to architecture, furniture and women, Versailles was its daily inspiration and aspiration.

The Present Period.

Again times have changed, slowly and steadily, and our modern movement—not a sudden mode of living or fashion—is growing logically and hand in hand with our present culture. Possessions are an expression of wealth is on the decline. It is not what we seem to be, but what we are. Our home today is no longer a showplace of the past, but a personality. Just as it was in other periods, our theaters, our movies, our dances, our music are the natural outgrowth of our culture, as well as our furniture, clothes, accessories. More so, since time and speed are important factors today. We have learned to talk and fly through the air; now we must try to adapt ourselves to an age when all the old values are changed. New demands create new materials. New materials create new forms.

For Beauty's Sake.

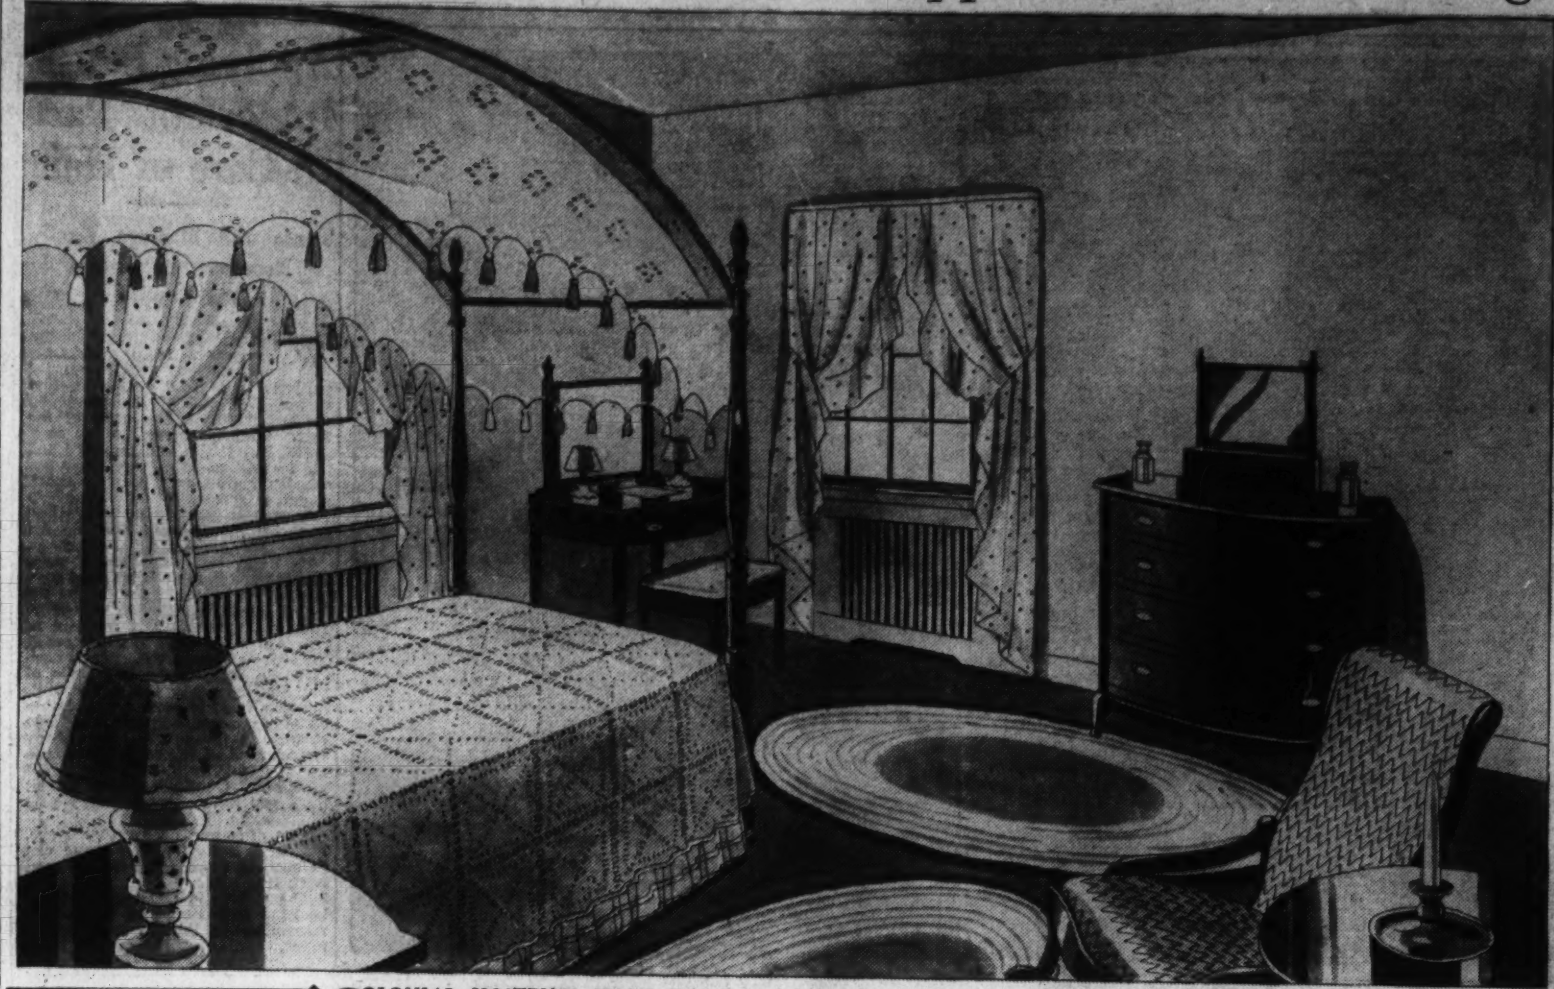

To be modern does not mean to deny the old. It means to adapt the old to the new, but not to copy it. We can take a dress five years old and by a few simple alterations bring it up to date. We need not throw away our old silver or glass or fine Sheraton tables. We present them with a feeling for the modern laws; balance, simplicity and restraint. We don't take symmetry with its limitations as the underlying principle; we show a piece for its own sake, properly organized in relation to its surroundings, with out the clutter and confusion of knick-knacks. The modern spirit is democratic and tolerant. We want to forget the fussiness of the Victorian atmosphere as well as the uniform, trivial stiffness of the Empire.

Outstanding Mode In Fabric Picture Is Summer Velvet

Summer velvet, the new and fascinating fabric that met with much success last season, is again taking a dramatic place in the summer fabric picture. With spun glass, organdie, mousseline de sole, and old-fashioned fabrics such as dotted Swiss, point d'esprit, muslins and embroidered linens, this is to be again a crisp, fresh, feminine summer. Crisp silk mouselines which are barred or striped, or dotted with velvet are coming in for lots of applause. Flower motifs, conventional designs in the refined pastel color range of the Empire and Victorian periods, stand out in rich and luxurious contrast to the plain background upon which they are posed.

True to Tradition Are These Hepplewhite Furnishings

Conn. Avenue Has Gay Spots Like Broadway

Atmosphere Is More Subdued, Generally, but the Spirit Is There.

By Chanticleer.

PERHAPS you never stopped to think about it, but Washington has a bit of a Broadway all its own. A subdued and less raucous Broadway, a street of soft lights and sweet music—but the spirit of Manhattan's Big Stem permeates every remote corner of Connecticut avenue's many wine-and-dine establishments just the same. How about a little tour? Beginning with the atmosphere of Old Russia—the Russian Troika. Here Helen Hamilton has set up Karavach, the whirlwind dancer of the Steppes, with a supporting company of dancers, soloists and Continental entertainers, some of whom were toasted in Moscow in the days of the empire. The motif is real; the food is unpronounceable on the menu—but lends itself to decidedly patronizing verdicts by the Troika patrons.

Two Favorites.

In the adjoining blocks are two favorites—the Club Habana, with a setting of deep blue sky and silver stars; and the Mayflower Lounge, where sophisticated from Washington's official, governmental and diplomatic families gather at the cocktail hour or after the theater. The Habana, with Moe Baer and his orchestra; Bert Granoff, popular tenor, and featured floor attractions, re-creates a Spanish supper room. Perhaps it is Madrid or Barcelona—or Havana—that it brings to you. The Mayflower, across the street, presents Sidney and his music, with Buddy Harmon as chief baton waver. Smart music and a grand place for request tunes.

What Spaghetti!

You say you enjoy really good Italian victuals? Well, around the corner on DeSales street is your little onion—Jene's, with the spaghetti and sauces that make you want to weep in your complete satisfaction. Where antipasto, and cici bean soup and the delicacies of the Italian kitchen are a thing of joy. And now, let's stop in at the Never carry the rouge out onto the temples, for the effect is aging—Wendy Barrie.

An oily complexion cream allowed to remain on the face during the bath is excellent for dry skin—Helen Broderick.

Moisten your lips slightly with a touch of finishing cream before applying lip rouge—Ginger Rogers.

To prevent your hands from chapping, rinse them in cool water following each washing—Katharine Hepburn.

Heigh-Ho where Pete Macias has injected the "smart supper club" germ into the systems of a large section of Washington's most sophisticated after-darkers. Marty Rubin will drop by your table and sing the latest, and the oldest, intimate ditties, and on the abbreviated floor the elite of the supper club ranks of the amusement world sing and dance for you. Handbags Like Hats Newest Innovation For Summer Wear

This summer might see you wearing your bag and carrying your hat because handbags that look like hats are the latest innovation for summer. An especially striking one is a flat, round purse in shiny black straw that suggests a pancake beret. It even has a bunch of vivid field flowers on the edge.

Winning applause is a big green straw bag fashioned like a floppy garden hat that hangs over your arm with ribbons.

Many attics are filled with useless luggage of all shapes and sizes because people bought luggage instead of grips. Hand luggage (porters) is used today by 80 per cent of travelers while almost the reverse was true 25 years ago. Again, Eastern United States is becoming congested like Europe, necessitating the transportation of luggage by carriers, as otherwise, your trunks barely arrive earlier than six hours after your arrival which is most inconvenient at times.

Upon her arrival from London, Mrs. Fairbanks, the former Lady Ashley, wore a black crepe gown, made high at the neck and trimmed only by a strand of pearls. With this she wore a black atrakhan fur coat and a black straw halo hat which turned back from her face showing her blond hair.

Strolling along the Paris boulevard with her famous husband, she wore a black woolen suit, fastening high at the neck. Brown beaver made the long wide sleeves of the suit and the fur was matched by a brown leather belt at the waist. The new Mrs. Fairbanks usually goes about hatless, her blonde bobbed hair blowing in the breeze, and carries hat and gloves in her hands.

Ostrich Plumes Definitely Back In New Version

Dame Fashion Cleverly Adopts Feathers to Modern Misses.

WHEN THAT popular bachelor monarch Edward VIII remarked recently that he would like to see ostrich feathers come back, he started something. He added doubtfully: "But I do not know if I can move fashions." He was quite a bit too modest.

For years as Prince of Wales, he set masculine sartorial standards throughout the world. Now he is apparently responsible for the newest fashion flair of the fair sex.

Ostrich feathers, it seems, are definitely back. You're going to see a lot of them right through the spring and summer, judging from the newest collections—and not just on hats, either.

Offhand, combining ostrich feathers with the currently smart tailored mood sounds like a proposition. Ostrich feathers, all fluffy and curly—the kind that were so devastating back in the gay Nineties—would be obviously out of place with trim tweeds and scarves and built-up heels. And for another thing, girls these days are pretty practical about their clothes, and the old-fashioned ostrich feathers just can't stand up to a dampish spring day, or evening.

But Dame Fashion is a clever wench. She uses glycerinated ostrich feathers, thus eliminating the fluffiness and getting a striking crepe effect which can face April weather undaunted.

These favored new versions of ostrich are cleverly produced by taking small ostrich feathers and treating them with a glycerine preparation so that the strands are pulled together, and the natural curl transformed into a smart straight effect, almost like an aigrette, which is both chic and practical. This unusual fluid, it seems, plays an important part not only in our medicine chest and on our toilet table, but in our wardrobes as well.

You'll see still more of these shiny ostrich feathers as the season advances. The stylists are already prophesying them as trimming for gorgeous warmer evening wraps, as being both flattering and unusual. Ostrich is used sometimes in strips giving a delightful fringed effect, or even more opulently, as a deep cape collar. The natural curled ostrich is also predicted for lovely "airy" wraps especially appropriate for the more girlishly elaborate modes or for the mature woman in very formal array.

Business Needs Artists as Aids In Trade Sales

A NEW ART development is evident in America today, and strange as it may seem, it is the result of the requirements of the business world and the demand of modern industry.

Art has become a necessity, and nearly every form of business now employs its staff of trained artists to meet the ever increasing demand for beauty.

Since the law of beauty is a precious asset in the make-up of every cultured man or woman, and as there is nothing either for general use or for use in the home, which does not require design, if only for its structure, one can readily appreciate how great is the field for this work.

Trade Aid to Nation. History has proved that the trade always comes to the nation offering the most beautiful and artistic wares. America has, with a few rare exceptions, failed to encourage or provide for the development of industrial art. We, as a Nation, are rich in raw materials. Our raw materials sold abroad have been bought back by us as imports for many times their original value.

We shall now be compelled to look to the selling of the manufactured product. To have commercial value our manufactured materials must possess art. To meet this new demand, design must be studied, not only for its beauty of color, line, balance and rhythm, but for its practical application and use as an embodiment in articles for everyday needs. Aside from the aesthetic quality and appeal to the public taste, there must be considered the workable possibilities of design, its cost of production, etc. For all this, there must be a practical basis, and the student must be trained to think in commercial terms for results.

Business Seeks Artists. Manufacturers are now seeking the co-operation of artists. They have learned that their goods are without value unless the art element forms a part of their product. The art schools of today have had to take into consideration this demand of the business world for art. The opportunity for the art student at this time is most favorable, offering as never before a broad field of activity in every branch of art training.

Prints Will Be Gay. Among the newest and most popular print fabrics are those with the barnyard as their theme. These feature minute rabbits, birds, roosters, pigs and ducks in vivid colors splashed against a solid background.

Well-Dressed Man Must Wear Swank Raincoat When It Rains

MORE AND MORE MEN are coming to realize the importance of "occasion" garments—that sports clothes, for instance, are to be worn for sports, business wear for business, evening wear for dress-up evenings, without any crisscrossing or blurring of the purposes of each. Jupiter Fluvius knows, and you should, that there is scarcely any occasion so universal as the rainy days—nor any "occasion garment" as essential as the lightweight, utilitarian raincoat.

If you ever smelled the nasty, muggy smell that emanates from a wet topcoat, you won't need to be told that a well-cut, efficient raincoat is an indispensable part of the male wardrobe. You only need see what was once a well-pressed suit hanging from your body like a bedraggled circus tent to know that a raincoat is necessary appearance-insurance. And you need only look at the modern raincoat, or try one on, to realize how comfortable and good-looking this highly utilitarian garment can be.

Lightweight—that's the modern goal of the raincoat makers. Light weight, so that they can be worn as a shell of protection over your regular coat without giving the weight of an added layer, and so that on the warmer days when you go without an outer coat the raincoat doesn't take its place.

Cotton gabardine, cotton poplin are two leading lightweight fabrics in the new raincoats. Cottons and silks coated with rubber or some other water repelling composition material form another important category. Rubberized cotton—cotton impregnated with rubber to shed water readily—is another variety.

Some oiled cottons and oiled silks are translucent, giving an informal appearance besides being extremely light weight. These are the balloon-cloth types of material.

Old Fashioned Idea Popular in Rings

Rings are the big news in the jewelry world, and beauties they are, for gentlemen as well as ladies. A visit to your special jeweler will bear out our story: beautiful diamond, emerald, sapphire, star sapphire, topaz, equamrine and gold and silver modern rings.

A very old-fashioned idea is again popular—the "Dearest" ring—diamond, emerald, amethyst, ruby, sapphire and topaz. A large ring in modern treatment for the little finger. It is not too expensive and is sentimental enough to go with hats tied under the chin and the gaily colored gloves.

Bridal Gowns Follow Trend To Simplicity

Accented by Long, Flowing Lines as Is Afternoon Wear.

PARIS, April 2 (U.P.)—The fashion for wedding gowns, like other styles in women's clothes, has been simplified this year. Bridal gowns are particularly adaptable to the new, long, flowing lines which have accented afternoon and evening gowns of the new collections shown here.

Molyneux, who uses considerable pleating in his new collection, made a gown for a smart Paris wedding in dull-surfaced white crepe with a high cowl neck achieved by the application of a triangular piece of shirring. The shirring runs into a point at the waist which is swathed in a sash of folds of the white crepe.

The skirt front is formed of a pointed insertion of pressed, unstitched pleats. The back of the skirt, which is fuller and extends in a long, pointed train, is similarly treated with unstitched pleats. Long tight sleeves extend over the lower part of the hand. This gown was with a simple tulle veil caught under a coronet of flat white flowers.

Another bridal gown from the same house is made of satin-back crepe with the dull surface upmost. The high neck stands out about 1 inch from the throat, the long sleeves have a slight fullness above the elbow and the waist is slightly bloused above a girdle of the same dull crepe satin. The long train is cut in one piece with the skirt and a tulle veil edged with a flounce of old lace is caught on the back of the head and falls in fold over the train of the dress.

Correct Hat Is Spring Tonic

Pick Up for the Spirits Provided by Newest Styles of Season.

THE RIGHT new hat will pick you up in spirits and perk you up in appearance in this in-between season when your spirits are low.

You may choose from halos, bonnets, toques, sailor's upturned brims, rolled brims, brims with ruffled edges, shovel shapes, cloche shapes, as well as classic types in felt, advises Helen Koues, fashion director of Good Housekeeping. To add to this liveliness of variation there are also heart-shaped hats, reminiscent of Mary Stuart, and hats with fan-shaped feathers, reminiscent of Henry III. Besides feathers, there are other trimming notes: knots of flowers, tufts of ribbons, touches of pleating and ruffling, as well as veils. Veils are often stiffened and coarse, almost always short, sometimes tied in big bows forming trimming. Straws include both shiny and dull panamas, baku, exotic weaves and the new shiny cellophane straws. Fabric hats include pique, linens, silks, woolsens and open-meshed materials. Pleated and wavy ruffles of pique and other light fabrics appear around the neck to complement the new hats, and in Paris scarves and ruffles are shown with them. Black, white, navy, strong green, bright red, also pale tones, including yellows, pinks, blues, are among spring millinery colors.

Galluses Give Way to Braces In Male Attire

HUSBANDS used to wear what they called—and even what they looked like—"galluses." These are the days, however, when a wife can look with pleasure at her husband's braces as he takes up his evening stand in the comfortable armchair by the radio. For designers of men's wear have at last given these once purely utilitarian devices the grace of eye-appealing color and good taste.

Women will be interested to know that it was a woman who first brought about the dress reform which transformed galluses to the modern suspender. And so will the man who thinks that this is a world where he is the pants-wearing animal, and where women should, Nazi fashion, tend only to children, church and cooking. The woman was Gloria Swanson. Remember her?

Ten years ago, according to the designer of the firm that first introduced the new type brace, a hurry call came in from a Hollywood motion picture lot. In a frantic note, a property man asked that a special pair of suspenders be made up for Miss Swanson, who refused to wear ordinary galluses in a forthcoming picture, in a role that demanded that she wear suspenders. The manufacturer seized some brightly colored elastic webbing, reserved for odd uses, and made up several samples.

The novelty struck him as an attractive one. When he showed his creation to buyers, they thought it might have possibilities. The possibilities proved even greater than hoped for. A new dress reform, probably aided by the open sympathy of the wives of husbands who wore galluses, was on its way. It is interesting to note that this season the popular colors in men's braces promise to be marine blue, champagne, maize, London tan and white. And if friend husband hasn't evolved out of the galluses epoch, the next time you are out to buy him a birthday gift, omit the customary tie and get him a pair of braces with eye-appeal.

Show Features Flower-Fans

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 2.—Flower fans are being carried in Manhattan's spring bridal processions.

In a wedding style show this week, the bridesmaids had fans made of 260 carnations, dyed to contrast with their lacy gowns.

This was the color scheme: Beet-root dress with yellow carnation fan, light gray with bluish pink fan, pale pink with blue, and light blue with deep pink.

The frocks, of net and lace, had hugs ruffled sleeves billowing below the elbow. In their hair the girls wore flowers to match their fans. Flower fans have a small handle and are held so they almost cover the dress-waist.

Instead of a fan, she carried three dozen small white calla lilies. Her maid of honor, in pink lace, had a blue delphinium fan.
